MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

"APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.

"APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.

"CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.

"DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.

"DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.

"EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.

"EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.

"FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.

"NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.

"OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.

"REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.

"MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—The Relationship.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Whether relationship created - Question of fact.]—In an action for damage done through negligent driving of a carriage & horses let to hire & driven by the servants of the owner, it is a question for the jury whether the servants were acting as the servants of the person hiring, or of the owner.—BRADY v. GILES (1835), 1 Mood. & R. 494, N. P.

3. —— Particular direction as to particular matter.]—On the trial, in an action for assault, pltf. proved that he was present in the gallery of a large hall where there was a meeting convened by members of an assocn., & that deft. acted as chairman. There was an interruption in the gallery near to the place where pltf. was standing, upon which deft. said, "I shall be obliged to bring those men to the front who are making the disturbance. Bring those men to the front." Pltf. was making no disturbance, but according to his statement he was seized by a man with a white ribbon in his coat & two policemen, & dragged over some benches to the front part of the gallery, & thereby injured. There was nothing to show the position or duty of those who seized him, or whether any instructions as to keeping order had been given them by deft., before the act complained of:—Held: there was no evidence to go to the jury of any liability on the part of deft., as there was not the ordinary relation of master & servant between him & those who assaulted pltf.; but only a particular direction as to a particular matter, & the words used by

SECT. 2.—FACTORS GOVERNING RELATIONSHIP.

SUB-SECT. 1.—EXERCISE OF CONTROL OVER SERVANT.

A. By Immediate Employer.

(a) In General.

8. Meaning of control.]—(1) A workman was engaged by a firm to break up old metal by means of blasting. He had no regular hours of work; his time of arrival depended on the kind of morning & the work to be done; he could leave when he liked; he pleased himself & did not go to work every day as there was not always work. Having suffered an injury while at work, which resulted in total incapacity, he made an application for compensation, & the county ct. judge found that he was a "workman" within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 13, on the ground that as the contract was, on the facts of the case, one in which it was impossible for him to delegate the work, it was a contract of service:—Held: whether there was power to delegate the work or not was not the correct test; the case must go back for a rehearing for the county ct. judge to consider more fully the question of control of the work & workman by the alleged employers.

By control I do not mean the actual control that in practice was exercised every day, because with a skilled workman the employer or the foreman is not always exercising control as to how to do his work. It is not necessary that it should be so, because he knows how to do it; but the question whether there is in the background, in the last resort, the power of control over, not only what the man has to do, but how he has to do it, is of great importance indeed. It is not necessary to say that you could not have a contract of service without this control, but if there was not that power of control as to the way in which the work is to be done in details, it would be very hard to establish a contract of master & servant (LORD STERNDALE, M.R.).

(2) The question of whether the man must do the work himself is not conclusive as to whether he is a servant or not (LORD STERNDALE, M.R.).—UNDERWOOD v. PERRY & SON, LTD. (1922), 15 B. W. C. C. 131, C. A.; subsequent proceedings, 15 B. W. C. C. 257, C. A.

9. Obligation on servant to obey orders.]—The mate of a vessel hired by the master, who was also one of the owners, at certain wages, is a servant within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 48, & is consequently entitled to six months' wages upon the bkpcy. of the master of the vessel.

I do not know of any actual case of a seaman being held to be a servant within the meaning of the Act of Parliament; but as he is hired to render his services for certain wages, & is bound to obey the orders of the master of the vessel who hired him, I think he is as much a servant as the clerk or shopman of any merchant or tradesman (SIR JOHN CROSS).—Re HUDSON, Ex p. HOMBORG

---

5 i. —— Control of mode of doing work.]—FLETCHER MOORE v. IRISH INSURANCE COMRS., [1916] 2 I. R. 70, n.—IR.

5 ii. —— ——.]—A well-sinker entered into an agreement to sink a well. The evidence showed that all the tackle used by the well-sinker was supplied by himself, & that he was not, in the course of the work, subject to any control:—Held: the man was working under no contract of service.—HUGHES v. QUINN (1917), 52 I. L. T. 21; 11 B. W. C. C. 420.—IR.

5 iii. —— ——.]—Held: persons appointed to act in an infirmary (a) as resident physicians & resident surgeons; (b) as non-resident house physicians, non-resident house surgeons, & clinical assistants; & (c) as supervisors of the administration of anæsthetics, were not persons employed within National Insurance Act, 1911, in respect that, as the managers of the infirmary had no control over the manner in which these members of the staff carried out their treatment of the patients no contract of service existed between them.—SCOTTISH INSURANCE COMRS. v. EDINBURGH ROYAL INFIRMARY, [1913] S. C. 751.—SCOT.

5 iv. —— ——.]—Lay missionaries, who hold no ecclesiastical status, & are appointed by, & subject to the control of, a minister or a kirk-session or a committee, are employed persons within National Insurance Act, 1911.—SCOTTISH INSURANCE COMRS. v. CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, [1914] S. C. 16.—SCOT.

5 v. —— ——.]—Where an employer retains the power of controlling the work which his employee is doing & of directing such employee as to the manner in which the work is to be done, the employee is usually called a servant.—ADDIS v. SCHILLER LIGHTING & PLUMBING CO., [1906] T. H. 210.—S. AF.

7 i. Personal performance of work —Whether conclusive as to relation.]—A. agreed with B. to do certain work for B. to paint some trucks according to specification. B. accepted this offer:—Held: this was a contract whereby A. was not bound to do any of the work personally but might get it done by deputy; therefore he was not an employee.—MCELROY v. AUSTRALIAN FORGE & ENGINEERING CO., PROPRIETARY, LTD. (1899), 24 V. L. R. 953.—AUS.

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—A. (a).

8 i. Meaning of control.]—Held: M. was to be subject to the control & direction of his employer in respect to the manner in which the work was to be done & that would constitute him a servant.—DONALD v. ST. JOHN, [1925] 3 D. L. R. 815.—CAN.

13. —— Employment for special purpose.]—Deft. employed P. to clean out a drain which was on deft.'s land. P. was not in deft.'s service, but was a common labourer, selected by deft. on account of his having dug the drain originally. P. cleaned out the drain without assistance from any other person, & without the further direction or inspection of deft. He received five shillings for the job, from deft. In the course of cleaning out the drain, P. took up part of an adjoining highway, & replaced the same in an improper manner & with insufficient materials, in consequence of which pltf.'s horse, passing along the highway, was injured:—Held: under these circumstances P. was not an independent contractor, but was acting as the servant & under the control of deft. & consequently deft. was responsible to pltf. for the injury.

The question is whether deft. & P. stood to each other in the relation of master & servant. The test here is whether deft. retained the power of controlling the work. No distinction can be drawn from the circumstance of the man being employed at so much a day or by the job. I think that here the relation was that of master & servant, not of contractor & contractee (CROMPTON, J.).—SADLER v. HENLOCK (1855), 4 E. & B. 570; 3 C. L. R. 760; 24 L. J. Q. B. 138; 24 L. T. O. K. lived in the houses in order to take care of them, but he was a clerk in resp.'s employ at a salary of £150 a year, & he resided in the houses together with his wife, children, & servant:—Held: K. was not "a servant or other person" within Revenue Act, 1868 (c. 14), s. 11.

Sir Frederick Pollock in his book on torts says: "The relation of master & servant exists only between persons of whom the one has the order & control over the work done by the other." This definition, I think requires some qualification. . . . The driver [of a motor car] may be the servant of the owner although the owner cannot control his work in the particulars in which the driver is controlled by the regulations. But broadly stated a contract of service does import that there exists in the person serving under the contract an obligation to obey the orders of the person served. A person employed to exercise his skill may or may not be a servant (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—SIMMONS v. HEATH LAUNDRY CO., [1910] 1 K. B. 543; 79 L. J. K. B. 395; 102 L. T. 210; 26 T. L. R. 326; 54 Sol. 17. —— Master of ship.]—Pltfs. chartered a barge, The Myrtle, for the carriage of a cargo of cement, which was lost through the sinking of the barge consequent upon her unseaworthiness. The barge was being worked on the system of "thirds," under which the master, C., took two-thirds of the gross freights, paying thereout the mate, crew, cost of provisions, & the expenses of the voyage, & handing over one-third of the gross-freights, less harbour & towage dues & brokerage, to deft., the owner, who provided the barge & paid for her upkeep. Neither the charterparty nor the bill of lading contained any reference to the owner. C. described only as "of the good ship The Myrtle," signed the charterparty, but not as "master" or "for the owner," & in the bill of lading, which he signed he was referred to as "the master of the said ship." In an action by pltfs. against deft. to recover the amount of the lost cargo, deft. denied liability on the ground that the contract was with the master, & that there was nothing to show that he was agent of, or servant for, an undisclosed principal. It appeared from the evidence that C. usually arranged the chartering; that he was appointed by deft. to work & sail the ship; & that he was not dismissible during the continuance of the voyage except for grave misconduct:—Held: upon the true inference to be drawn from the facts as proved, there was no demise or bailment of the ship to the master; & he managed & sailed the ship for the joint benefit of himself & the owner whose servant or agent he was.

The critical test in all such cases is: Where does the real control rest? By retaining control over the master the owner retains control also over the ship, & in that event it is immaterial whether he receives a share of the gross freights or the net profit.—ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS (1910), LTD. v. ASHTON, [1915] 2 K. 25. ——.]—Deft. was the owner of a brougham, horses, & harness which he kept at a livery stable. The keeper of the livery stable was in the habit of supplying deft. with one of his own servants to drive the brougham. One day, whilst the brougham was being driven with one of deft.'s horses, the driver, owing to his negligence, as the jury found, lost control of the horse, which dashed through the window of pltf.'s shop & did damage. The man who was driving the brougham at the time of the accident had continuously driven deft. for the preceding six weeks, & at the time of the accident was wearing a suit of livery which had been supplied to him by deft.:—Held: upon these facts there was evidence on which a jury might find that the driver at the time of the accident was acting as the servant of deft., so as to render deft. responsible for the consequences of his negligence.

It is clear upon the authorities that it is not at all impossible for a man to be in the practical relation of servant to two different employers. . . . The case of Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co., No. 46, post, makes it quite clear that a man may be the general servant of one person & yet at the same time be the servant of another in relation to a particular matter & it also shows that the important element, whereby to determine whether he is the servant of the one person or of the other in relation to the particular business in which he is engaged, is which of the two persons

This is not the case of a man employing his own immediate servants either domestic or others . . . for the jobman was a person carrying on a distinct employment . . . in which he furnished men, & let out horses to all such persons as chose to employ him. This coachman was not hired to deft. He had no power to dismiss him. He paid him no wages. The man was only to drive the horses of the jobman. It is true the master paid him no wages. . . . It is [often] the case with servants at inns & hotels. 29. ———.]—Where the owners of a carriage were in the habit of hiring horses from the same person, to draw it for a day or drive, & the owner of the horses provided a driver through whose negligence an injury was done to a third party :—Held : the owners of the carriage were not liable to be sued for such injury; it made no difference, that the owners of the carriage had always been driven by the same driver, he being the only regular coachman in the employ of the owner of the horses; or that they had always paid him a fixed sum for each drive; or that they had provided him with a livery, which he had left at their house at the end of each drive, & that the injury in question was occasioned by his leaving the horses while so depositing the livery in their house.

If deft. had insisted on the horses being driven, not by one of the regular servants but by a stranger to the job master it would have made all the difference. . . . The master is responsible for the acts of his servant & that person is undoubtedly liable who stood in the relation of master to the wrongdoer. But the liability . . . must cease where the relation itself ceases to exist; & no other person than the master can be liable. I think that W. was not the servant of deft. but, looking at his hire & employment, he seems to be the servant to B. [the contractor] & that B. is responsible for him when he is driving on his ordinary duty for deft. (ERLE, J.).—NICHOLSON v. HARRISON (1856), 27 L. T. O. S. 56; 4 W. R. 459.

35. ——.]—A co., which carried on the business of ironfounders, entered into a written contract with deft. for the hire from him of a van, horse, & driver, for the purpose of delivering goods to their customers. The contract provided that deft. was to supply a capable man to drive & take charge of the van & horse, that the man in deft.'s employ, & all charges & claims whatsoever in reference to the van, horse & man were to be paid for by deft., who was to be responsible for the same, & that the co. were only to be responsible for the payment for the van, horse, & man at a certain rate per annum by monthly payments. The driver of a van supplied to the co. by deft. under the above-mentioned contract was guilty of negligence when delivering a girder at the premises of a customer of the co. by which pltf., a servant of the customer, was injured. There was no evidence that any one representing the co. exercised any control over the driver in respect of the delivery of goods for the co.:—Held: upon the true construction of the contract, the implication was that the control of the driver, when delivering goods for the co., remained in deft., & deft. was therefore liable for his negligence.—WALDOCK v. WINFIELD, [1901] 2 K. 36. ——.]—In an action for damages for negligence against a metropolitan borough council, & against the person who had contracted to supply horses & drivers to work the council's water vans employed in watering streets, the jury, in giving their verdict for pltf., found that there had been negligence on the part of the driver of a water van, who, they found as a fact, was the contractor's servant, but who, at the time of the accident, was acting under the control of the council in his work.

The ct., upon this verdict, gave judgment against the contractor as master of the driver because, upon the construction the ct. placed on the contract between defts., the contractor had not parted with the control of his servant.—MILEHAM v. ST. MARYLEBONE CORPN. & LATTER (1903), 67 J. P. 110; 1 L. G. R. 412.

37. Driver provided for motor car.]—Deft. purchased & paid for a motor car in London, & the vendor agreed to provide a driver to drive the car to a certain place outside London & deliver it there, as deft.'s driver did not know the locality, & had no experience of the class of car purchased. While the car was being driven by the driver supplied by the vendor from London to the place named for delivery it collided with & damaged a motor bicycle owing to the negligence of the driver. At the time deft., his driver, & his son were in the car. In an action in the county ct. by the owner of the bicycle against deft. to recover for the damage to the bicycle, the judge held that the driver of the car, though he was the general servant of the vendor, was at the time under the control of deft., who had the property in & possession of the car, & therefore deft. was liable to pltf. for the negligence of the driver:—Held: the decision was right.—PERKINS v. STEAD (1907), 23 T. When the waggons were loaded they were taken from the dock shed on to the railway lines outside the shed & left there until they were taken away—usually by means of an engine or by man power, but sometimes by horses. On the occasion in question a horse was employed, which was in charge of a man who was lent by defts., who were team owners, under an agreement with the Minister of Munitions. The man took a waggon out of a door in the shed on the lines outside where there were other waggons standing in a position which left a space or gangway between them opposite to another doorway which was wholly or partly open, & was being used by persons coming & going from other vessels in the dock. When the man had taken the waggon on to the outside lines he proceeded to move it up the lines against some of the waggons so as to set them in motion & close the space or gangway in front of the second doorway. He did this without giving any warning, because, as he said, he thought that door was not being used. Pltf., who had come out of the door & was crossing the lines, was caught between two waggons & was seriously injured. Pltf. was not guilty of negligence. An action was brought by pltf. against defts. to recover damages in respect of the personal injuries occasioned to him by the negligence of defts.' servants:—Held: the negligence which caused the accident was the act of the man in moving the waggons without giving warning of his being about to do so; he did this as the servant of defts. & not of the Minister of Munitions; & therefore pltf. was entitled to judgment.—POULSON v. JARVIS (JOHN) & SONS, LTD. 40. Crew hired with tug.]—By an Act for improving & maintaining a harbour, the comrs. were empowered to build or provide steam-tugs for towing vessels into or out of the harbour, & to receive for the use of such vessels such reasonable compensation as they should fix. The comrs. entered into an arrangement with the proprietors of certain steam vessels to perform this duty for them at certain specified rates of charge; the comrs. paying them in addition a certain sum annually, & the vessels being placed under the direction & control of the harbour-master. A vessel having sustained damage in consequence of the negligence & want of skill of the master & crew of a tug, whilst being towed into the harbour, the owner brought an action in the county ct. against the harbour comrs., &, under the direction of the judge, recovered a verdict. The ct., on appeal, set aside the verdict, holding that the decision of the judge could not, upon any inference which could legitimately be drawn from the facts before him, be correct in point of law.—CUTHBERTSON v. PARSONS (1852), 12 C. 42. ——.]—A Norwegian barque arrived at the mouth of the Ribble, intending to proceed up the river to Preston. Under order from the corpn. she was lightened & furnished with a tug by the harbour master & placed by him second in a string of vessels, each of which was in tow of a tug, & started in due time up the river for Preston. When near Preston the tug towing the vessel in front of the barque slackened speed for some reason which was not proved. This tug had been chartered to the corpn., & was expected to have towed the last five miles in thirty-five minutes, whereas in fact she occupied an hour in so doing. The barque could not pass the vessels ahead owing to the narrowness of the channel; the tide fell, & she grounded & sustained damage:—Held: notwithstanding that the tug was not the property of the corpn., but had only been hired by them, the crew of the tug were as much the servants of the corpn. as if the tug had belonged to the corpn., & therefore, supposing the crew to have been incompetent or negligent, the corpn. would be liable.

51. Nurse supplied by association—Under control of doctor to whom supplied.]—Defts. were an assocn. whose object was to provide for the supply of duly qualified nurses to attend on the sick in a certain neighbourhood. The assocn. for that purpose appointed & paid salaries to nurses, for whose services they made charges to persons on whose application the nurses were supplied. The assocn. issued printed rules & regulations with regard to the duties of their nurses & other matters with a view as well to the protection of the nurses as to ensuring their efficiency while engaged in nursing. These regulations provided for the exercise of certain supervision over the nurses by a superintendent appointed by the assocn.; but, with regard to the work of a nurse while engaged in nursing a patient, it was provided, inter alia, that, while so engaged she should not absent herself from duty without the permission of the patient's friends & that she should implicitly follow the instructions of the patient's medical man. A form which was sent out by the assocn. upon supplying nurses, indicated to the person applying for the nurse that, while engaged in nursing the patient, the nurse was to be regarded as employed by that person. Two nurses were supplied by the assocn. for the purpose of nursing the female pltf. through an operation which was about to be performed upon her by a medical man in attendance upon her. An injury was occasioned to the female pltf. through the negligence of the nurses, or one of them, while engaged in nursing her:—Held: upon the true construction of the documents in relation to the supply of the nurses, the contract of the assocn. was, not to nurse the female pltf. through the agency of the nurse as their servants, but merely to procure for her duly qualified nurses, & the nurses were not, in nursing the female pltf., acting as the servants of the assocn.; & therefore defts. were not liable in respect of negligence of the nurses supplied by them.—HALL v. LEES, [1904] 2 K. 53. Attendants hired with theatre.]—Defts., who were the governing body of a hospital, hired a cinematograph theatre on Sundays, one of the terms being that the hospital would pay the wages of the staff for the days on which the theatre was taken. Pltfs., with two others, took a box at the theatre on a Sunday, & during the performance one of the theatre attendants, who was sent to be box with a message, committed a technical assault on pltfs. The colliers paid the drawers out of their earnings, according to an agreement between them, in which the coal proprietors took no part, & discharged the drawers as they thought fit, without interference on the part of the proprietors, except that the latter might discharge the collier if he injustly discharged the drawer, & that both collier & drawer might be discharged for transgressing the rules of the mine. 64. Master may direct how work to be done.]—Prisoner kept a refreshment house, & was employed by the prosecutors to get orders for their goods, to collect the money & pay it over. He was paid by commission. He was to go about among the farmers to get orders, but no definite time was to be spent in so doing. He was styled by them their agent for the particular district. Prosecutors had a store at B. under the controul of prisoner, who supplied customers from the stores pursuant to the orders he obtained. In order to obtain the security of a guarantee society for prisoner's conduct, & in compliance with their regulations, it was arranged that the prosecutors should pay prisoner a salary of £1 a year. Prisoner having got into arrear was treated by prosecutors as a debtor for the amount. Prisoner fraudulently appropriated money which he received from customers, & gave a false account:—Held: a conviction for embezzlement could not be sustained, as the above facts did not establish that prisoner was the servant of prosecutors.

It seems to me that the difference between the relations of master & servant & of principal & agent is this: A principal has the right to direct what the agent has to do; but a master has not only that right, but also the right to say how it is to be done (BRAMWELL, B.).—R. v. WALKER (1858), Dears. & B. 600; 27 L. 66. Distinguished from mercantile agent.]—Pltf., wishing to sell furniture together with certain tapestry known as the "Aubusson" tapestry, stored it in a house & engaged one P., an art dealer who had an antique shop near by, to sell it for him on commission. P. lived in the house & brought customers to see the tapestry. Customers dealt with P. only & knew nothing of pltf., but P. had no authority to complete a sale without pltf.'s sanction. P. falsely represented to pltf. that he had sold the tapestry to one W. for £525 & so obtained pltf.'s consent to the removal of the tapestry for sale & delivery to W. P. then sold it to deft. in fraud of pltf. for £250. Deft. acted in good faith in the usual course of business, & had no notice of pltf.'s title:—Held: P. was a mercantile agent & not a mere servant or shopman; a mercantile agency under Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), may exist although the agent, as here, is acting for one principal only & has no general occupation as agent; P. was not in possession of the tapestry in virtue of his residence in the house, but he came into possession of it as mercantile agent, when he was allowed to take it away under colour of the alleged sale to W., even though pltf.'s sanction was obtained by fraud; the sale to deft. took place in the ordinary course of P.'s business as a mercantile agent within Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), & deft. was therefore not liable for conversion.—LOWTHER v. HARRIS, [1927] 1 K. 71. Bankrupt carrying on own business — Subject to control & inspection of trustees.]—J. executed a deed of inspectorship under the Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134), by which he assigned all his property, but not his business, to trustees, upon trust for the benefit of his creditors. The deed contained a covenant by J. to carry on his business to the best of his ability under the inspection & control of the trustees to whom he was to pay all moneys received by him ; a provision that the trustees should be liable as against each other for his own defaults only, & an express declaration that the deed was intended to operate as a deed o inspectorship & composition under the Act. The trustees derived no benefit under the deed othe than that which they shared in common with th other creditors. After the deed was registered pltfs. supplied goods upon written orders expressed to be " for J." to the place where he had carried on his business previously to the execution of the deed, & where the business was still being carried on under his management. The trustees regularly supplied him with money for the current expenses weekly in advance, & they had no personal knowledge of the orders given to pltfs., who on the other hand, were not shown to have had any knowledge of the deed :—Held : the real intention of the parties as appearing by the deed was that J. should carry on the business as his own, subject to the inspection & control of the trustees ; & the relation of master & servant or of principal & agent did not exist between them & him, & consequently they were not liable to pltfs. for the price of the goods, supplied on his orders.—EASTERBROCK v. BARKER (1870), L. SUB-SECT. 5.—EMPLOYER AND CONTRACTOR.

A. How Relationship Determined.

(a) In General.

72. Mixed question of law & fact — Effect of written contract between parties.]—Defts., who were the occupiers of a dancing hall, engaged on the terms of a written agreement, a band to provide music therein. The agreement provided that the band should not, in the music played, infringe any copyright, & should be liable for damages & costs caused by any infringement. There was also a notice posted in the hall that " only such music as may be played without fee or licence is allowed be played in this hall." On one occasion the played certain music the copyright of which belonged to pltfs., without pltfs.' licence ; but defts. did not know, & had no reasonable ground for suspecting, that this infringement would take place. In an action by pltfs. for damages & an injunction :—Held : (1) on its true construction, the agreement between defts. & the band constituted the latter the servants of defts., & not independent contractors, the band on the occasion in question were acting in the course of their employment.

(2) The question whether a man be a servant or an independent contractor is often a mixed question of law & fact. If, however, the relationship rests upon a written document only the question is primarily one of law. The contract is to be construed in the light of relevant circumstances. . . . It seems, however, reasonably clear that the final test, if there be a final test, & certainly the test to be generally applied lies in the nature & degree of detailed control over the person alleged to be a servant. . . . I conceive that a general manager, at a high salary, of a partnership, or the managing director of a limited co. at an even higher salary are usually servants & not independent contractors (MCCARDIE, J.).—PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY, LTD. v. MITCHELL & BOOKER (PALAIS DE DANSE), LTD., [1924] 1 K. 76. Cattle drover — Licenced.] Deft., a butcher, employed a licenced drover to drive home some bullocks for him from Smithfield Market. The drover employed a servant of his own for the purpose, through whose negligence a bullock got into pltf.'s premises, & injured his property. The drover was licenced to drive cattle from Smithfield within the City ; & it appeared that none but the purchasers themselves, or licenced drovers, were allowed to do so ; but the accident took place out of the City :—Held : deft. was not liable to be sued for the injury.

Here the butcher does not as a regular part of his business employ the drover. 93. ——.]—In the case of a servant, the employer by hiring him to a certain extent accredits & becomes responsible civilly for his acts. Thus, W. [the sub-contractor] might be liable for the consqeuences of the negligence of the labourers employed by him. But it by no means follows that defts., the original contractors, are responsible for the acts of W. One of the poles of the scaffold rested on a highway, & owing to the want of sufficient light to warn the passers-by, D. stumbled over the pole & was injured; subsequently to which additional lights were placed on the spot, & B. paid for them:—Held: B. was not liable, & D.'s remedy lay against C.

SUB-SECT. 7.—TENANCY.

95. Whether occupation as servant or tenant—Occupancy by way of privilege—Pauper tenant of overseers.]—One put by overseers of the poor into a house to live there is merely a servant, & his possession is theirs, & he may commit arson by burning it.—R. v. GOWEN (1786), 2 East, P. C. 1027.

Annotation:—Mentd. R. v. Wallis (1832), 1 Mood. C. C. 344.

96. ——.]—A schoolmaster was permitted, but not required, by his employers to live in a certain house so long as he continued to hold the appointment of schoolmaster:—Held: the schoolmaster did not occupy the house by virtue of his employment, &, therefore, was entitled to have his name inserted in division 1 of the list of voters.—DOVER v. PROSSER, [1904] 1 K. 97. ——.]—The true principle for determining whether occupation by a person in the capacity of a servant is occupation as tenant, is this: If the occupation be as servant it is not a tenancy, if it be not as servant it is a tenancy; though the person be required to occupy.—BURY ST. 100. ——.]—A steel-tester, engaged during the daytime at his employers' works, entered into an agreement with his employers, of which there was a written memorandum, to occupy a certain house attached to the office of the works. He agreed to be responsible for certain cleaning operations in the house & other duties, & in return he was to have the house rent & rates free, & also to have free coal & light, etc. The cleaning duties were carried out by his daughters during the four years he occupied the house. He was killed by gas escaping into his bedroom from a stove in the office where it had been lighted by the night watchman. The county ct. judge held that the workman was under a contract of service to perform the duties set out in the written memorandum & found that he was compelled to sleep on the premises to see that these duties were carried out. He held that death was due to an accident arising out of & in the course of the employment:—Held: the contract with regard to the cottage was merely a tenancy agreement & embodied no contract of service.—WRAY v. TAYLOR BROTHERS & CO. (1912), 109 L. T. 120; 6 B. W. C. C. 529, C. A.

101. —— Co-existence of relationships of tenancy & service in same parties.]—Bill to set aside the lease of a farm granted to a steward by his employer, dismissed, with costs; although the lease was for a term longer than was usual on the estates, & was granted at the solicitation of the steward, on an agreement made before the subsisting lease had expired, & at a rent lower than was offered to the steward on behalf of the occupying tenant; it appearing that the rent to be paid by the steward had been fixed by a surveyor named for that purpose by the employer, & on a valuation made in the manner usual with the surveyor; & the offer of a higher rent being known to the employer before he executed the lease.

There is no rule of policy which prevents a steward from being a lessee. There is no rule of policy which prevents a steward receiving from the bounty of the employer a beneficial lease (LEACH, V.-C.).—SELSEY (LORD) v. RHOADES (1824), 2 Sim. & St. 41; 57 E. 102. —— House not house of master—Rent paid by master.]—A servant occupying a house cannot be said to hold it as servant, if it be not the master's house.

R., a brewer, engaged L. as clerk, at a yearly salary, & agreed to permit him to occupy a certain house as his residence, free from rent, rates, & taxes, another clerk being also boarded & lodged in the same house if R. should require it, but paying for his board: & such salary & house accommodation were to be in full satisfaction to L. for all perquisites, & for his expenses in the service. Either party might give the other three months' notice of determining the service. L. occupied the house for some time, & then, his health being impaired, he removed to another. L. agreed with the landlord for this house, but the latter considered R. as his tenant. The furniture of the first house, belonging to R., was removed to the second. L. was assessed to the poor rates & window duty; & these, as well as the rent, were paid by R. at the brewery. L. once objected to being registered as a voter by reason of occupying the house, but afterwards acquiesced, & voted at the election of a borough member. Subsequently, L. appealed against a poor rate in which he was assessed as the occupier, alleging that he held as servant only, & R. appeared on the hearing of the appeal, & claimed to be the party ratable. The sessions confirmed the rate, but stated the above facts for the opinion of this ct.:—Held: L., the clerk, & not R., was the ratable occupier.—R. v. LYNN (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 379; 3 Nev. & P. 103. — — ——.]—Pauper, whose children were engaged to work for three years at a mill, removed with his family to a cottage rented by the mill owner, C., for the convenience of families so employed. The bargain between him & C. was, that a stated weekly payment for the use of the cottage should be deducted from the children's wages. Pauper, who was not himself in the service of C., continued to occupy the cottage for sixteen years, during all which time, & after he quitted it, some one or more of his children continued to work at the mill. He quitted without regular notice, in consequence of the sale of the cottage:—Held: pauper's occupation was as tenant, & not as servant.—R. v. BISHOPTON (INHABITANTS) (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 824; 1 Per. & Dav. 598; 8 L. SECT. 4.—DURATION OF RELATIONSHIP.

Termination of relationship.]—See Part IV., Sect. 2, post.

104. Yearly hiring—Relationship continuous throughout term.]—(1) Where a contract of hiring contains an express exception of any particular time, so that during that time the servant is free from the control of the master, that is not a hiring for a year, & service under it will not confer a settlement. . . . The law implies in every contract of hiring an undertaking by the servant to work at all reasonable hours when required. In factories, the ordinary hours of working are, generally speaking, twelve hours a day; but it by no means follows from thence that the master may not on extraordinary occasions require his servants to work at other hours: & whether he does so or not, the relation of master & servant will equally subsist during the whole of the day (BAYLEY, J.).

In order to constitute a yearly hiring the contract must be such that the relation of master & servant will subsist during the whole of the year, & during the whole of every day in the year (LITTLEDALE, J.).

(2) I have no doubt that what passed by parol between the pauper & the foreman was not admissible evidence to explain what the bargain was (PARKE, J.).—R. v. ST. 107. —— ——.]—A pauper was "hired for a year, at 4*s.* 6*d.* a week, to work from six in the morning till seven in the evening, & to make as much overwork as he chose":—Held: an exceptive hiring.

The stipulations are that the servant shall receive fixed wages, that he shall work from six in the morning till seven in the evening, & that he may make as much overwork as he chooses. But he could not have been compelled to make any overwork; he had a right any & every evening to say to his master, "I have worked thirteen hours to-day, & I will work no more till to-morrow." This is clearly an exception in the contract, limiting the control of the master over the servant to thirteen hours a day; beyond that period the master had no right to compel work, nor was the servant under any obligation to perform it (BAYLEY, J.).—R. v. BIRMINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1829), 9 B. & C. 925; 2 Man. & Ry. It was a contract to work for eleven out of the fourteen days, the Sundays & pay Saturdays, when single shift, being days on which the relation of master & servant did not exist between the parties.—R. v. COWPEN (INHABITANTS) (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 333; 6 Nev. & M. SECT. 4.—DRIVERS OF HACKNEY CARRIAGES.

111. Whether servant of owner—As regards the public.]—The licenced driver of a cab licenced to deft. is a servant of deft. for whose trespass when driving the cab deft. is liable, although the driver hire the cab at a sum certain each day, by a bargain having reference to that day only; such an agreement being merely the mode of paying deft.'s wages.—MORLEY v. DUNSCOMBE (1848), 11 L. The horses were fed at the expense of deft., & his name appeared upon a plate on the cab, as required by London Hackney Carriages Act, 1831 (c. 22), s. 20:—Held: under the circumstances, & looking to the provisions of above statutes the driver was to be considered as the servant or agent of deft., with authority to enter into contracts for the employment of the cab, & deft. therefore was liable for a loss occasioned by the breach of a contract by the driver safely & securely to carry.—POWLES v. HIDER (1856), 6 E. & B. 207; 25 L. 113. —— ——.]—The relation of the proprietor & the driver of a cab quoad the public is that of master & servant; inter se that of bailor & bailee.

Where there is no wrongful user of the cab by the driver, the proprietor is responsible for his negligence. A driver, who had no specified time for starting from or leaving the proprietor's stables, made a short deviation for his own convenience at the close of his day's work & while returning to the stables. After such deviation he was again returning when he ran over & injured pltf.:—Held: the driver was not on an independent journey, & must be considered to be in the proprietor's employ at the time of the accident.—VENABLES v. SMITH (1877), 2 Q. position of the driver of a taxi-cab is in most respects identical with the position of the driver of a horse cab. It has been held by a series of authorities by which we are bound that the relation of a proprietor of a horse cab & a driver is not in ordinary circumstances one of master & servant, although as between a member of the public injured through the negligence of the driver the proprietor is liable. I think that the relation was that of bailment (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—DOGGETT v. WATERLOO TAXI-CAB CO., LTD., [1910] 2 K. B. 336; 79 L. J. K. B. 1085;

115. ——— ———.]—Applt. was a taxicab driver who, in driving a cab of resps., met with an accident. The county ct. judge found that the relation between resps. & applt. was that of bailor & bailee, & not that of master & servant, & dismissed the application:—Held: the finding of the county ct. judge could not be disturbed.

It may well be that though the relation between the taxicab owner & his driver inter se be that of bailor & bailee, the driver may still quoad third parties be treated as the agent of the proprietor authorised to ply for hire in the streets for reward to the latter; & the proprietor be thereby rendered liable for those acts of the driver which were within the scope of the latter's authority (LORD ATKINSON).

Quoad the public, the relation of the cab driver to the cab owner was, in my opinion, one of agency; so that, for negligence in the conduct of his business, both principal & agent might naturally be responsible to the public (LORD SHAW).—SMITH v. GENERAL MOTOR CAB CO., LTD., [1911] A. 116. ——— ——— London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843 (c. 86).]—Above Act does not, under all circumstances, create the relation of master & servant between the cab proprietor & the driver.

Pltf. was injured through the negligent driving of a cab driver, & brought his action for damages against the cab proprietor. By the terms of arrangement between the proprietor of the cab & the driver the proprietor let the cab to the driver by the week, the driver providing the horse & harness, & paying 10*s.* a week for the hire of the cab:—Held: the proprietor was not liable for the negligent driving of the cab driver, for the relation between them was that of bailor & bailee, & the relation of master & servant was not created between them by above Act.—KING v. SPURR (1881), 8 Q. 117. ——— ——— ———.]—The relationship between the cab proprietor & the driver is that of bailor & bailee. an action against deft. to recover damages for injury sustained in consequence of the negligence of the driver of the carriage who was put to drive the carriage by deft.'s son:—Held: the effect of above Act was to render the registered proprietor of a hackney carriage in the metropolis responsible for the acts of the driver as if the driver were his servant, & consequently deft. was liable.—KEEN v. HENRY, [1894] 1 Q. 119. ——— ——— ———.]—Deft. & her son were partners in the business of cab proprietors in London. A cab belonging to the partners, which was let in the ordinary way to a cabman, through his negligence came into collision with another vehicle, in which pltf. was riding, whereby injuries were occasioned to pltf. The licence for the cab was taken out in the name of deft.'s son, who appeared on the register of licences as the proprietor thereof. In an action by pltf. against deft. in respect of the injuries occasioned to pltf. as aforesaid:—Held: the action was maintainable on the ground that the liability imposed in such cases on cab proprietors, by virtue of the Acts relating to hackney carriages, is not confined to licenced proprietors, so that deft. must be considered as being a licenced proprietor in respect of the cab.

The relation between the cab proprietor & the cab driver in these cases, at common law, & independently of statute, would be, not that of master & servant, or principal & agent, but that of bailor & bailee (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—GATES v. BILL (R.) & SON, [1902] 2 K. 130. Whether servant of manager of company—Manager registered as proprietor.]—A licence for a taxicab was applied for & issued to deft. as the managing director of a limited co., & his name & address were entered in the register of licences of hackney carriages, kept at Scotland Yard, under the headings "Name of Proprietor" & "Address," with the addition of the words "Managing Director," & the name & address of the co. Pltf., a member of the public, was injured by, as he alleged, the negligent driving of the cab, & he brought an action against deft. to recover damages. At the trial pltf. put in a certified copy of the entry in the register for the purpose of proving that deft., being registered as the proprietor of the cab, was liable for the acts of the driver. Deft. tendered evidence to show that he was not the owner or partowner of the cab, & was therefore not liable. The judge rejected the evidence upon the ground that the entry in the register was conclusive as to the liability of deft. as proprietor for the acts of the driver:—Held: the register was not conclusive, & the evidence was wrongly rejected.

No relation of master & servant, & indeed no relation at all, was created at common law between deft. as managing director & any individual driver. There is nothing in any of the Acts or regulations to create the relation of master & servant between deft. & the driver & render him liable for the driver's acts merely because he is on the register under the name proprietor (PICKFORD, L.J.).—KEMP v. ELISHA, [1918] 1 K. 131. Definition.]—Pltf. agreed to enter deft.'s service as head gardener, & to have the management & superintendence of deft.'s hot-houses, pineries, etc., at the wages of £100. Pltf. resided in a house belonging to deft., in his domain, but apart from deft.'s house. Pltf. had the privilege of taking in apprentices, & had taken in two, at £15 per annum premium. Pltf. remained with deft. in the capacity above mentioned about four years, when deft. gave him a month's warning. In an action brought by pltf. to recover a quarter's wages, as being a yearly servant:—Held: he was a menial servant only, & was only entitled to a month's warning.

A groom is a domestic servant (ALDERSON, B.). I should have been inclined to have told the jury, that pltf. was a menial servant; for, though he did not live in deft.'s house, or within the curtilage, intra moenia, he lived in the grounds within the domain (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—NOWLAN v. ABLETT (1835), 2 Cr. 132. ——.]—The question whether a particular person is within the definition of "workman" so as to be able to claim the benefit of the Employer's Liability Act, 1880 (c. 90) is one of fact, even though there may be no dispute as to the nature of his duties & the circumstances under which they are performed.

The expression "domestic or menial servant" has reference not to the nature of the duties performed, but to the relation in which the person performing them stands towards his employer. The words "domestic" & "menial" are not meant to be opposed to one another in the definition; they mean the same thing, & were inserted to exclude from the operation of the Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90) & the effect is therefore to exclude from the operation of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), which incorporates the definition of the Employers and Workmen Act, persons whose personal relations in the household or retinue of their masters made it inconvenient that the disputes between them & their masters should be settled before magistrates under the summary procedure provided by the Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90).

For the principle I am to apply I can find no better statement than that enumerated in Roberts & Wallace's book on Employers' Liability, viz. that menial servant denotes those persons whose main duty is to do actual bodily work as servants for the personal comfort, convenience, or luxury of the master, his family & his guests, & who for this purpose become part of the master's residential or quasi-residential establishment (COLLINS, J.).—PEARCE v. LANSDOWNE (1893), 62 L. To enter May 12, 1838." Deft. had dismissed pltf. upon a month's warning. In an action brought by pltf. to recover a quarter's wages as being a yearly servant:—Held: he was a menial servant, & was, therefore, by the general rule of law, entitled to a month's notice only; & the memorandum of agreement contained nothing which showed an intention in the parties to exclude that rule.—JOHNSON v. BLENKENSOPP (1841), 5 Jur. 870.

Three months' notice on either side to be given, at the expiration of which time the cottage to be vacated by W., who occupies it as bailiff, in addition to his salary":—Held: this agreement constituted the relation of master & servant between C. & W., & not that of partners; W. was not a menial servant, but a labourer; & the agreement was admissible in evidence, though unstamped, as it fell within the exemption in the Stamp Act as an agreement for the hire of a labourer.—R. v. WORTLEY (1851), 2 Den. 333; T. & M. 636; 21 L. 137. Huntsman—Contract for yearly wages & perquisites—Perquisites not receivable before end of year.]—A huntsman is a menial servant, & therefore, though he be hired at yearly wages & with the right to receive perquisites which cannot be fully received until the end of a year's service, the hiring is presumed to be subject to the condition that it may be determined by a month's notice at any time.

It seems to me that the reason of the general rule in these cases is that there are some contracts for services which bring the parties into close proximity with one another. . . . Where the duties of a servant are such that he is required to be frequently near his master, if any ill-feeling should arise between them, the presence of that servant would be a constant source of irritation to the master (ERLE, C.J.).—NICOLL v. GREAVES (1864), 17 C. A. was the gardener of B. at a mansion, where B. formerly resided, but which for a short time previously to & at the time of the decease of B. was let by B. to M. for a short time. A., however, had never ceased to be the servant of B., but had the charge & management of the gardens at the mansion, for which he received an annual sum from B., in addition to his yearly wages. A. was not resident in the mansion, but resided in a cottage in the garden, in the same manner as he did when the mansion was inhabited by B.:—Held: A. was not entitled to a legacy as coming within the description of "a domestic servant of testator living with him or in his service at the time of his death."—VAUGHAN v. BOOTH (1852), 16 Jur. 808.

The servants who were & had been in the service of testator for one year previously to his death were, in addition to maidservants resident on board wages in the mansion house, a coachman, who resided in a cottage adjoining the pleasure-grounds, a groom who occupied a room over stables in the park, & close to the mansion, & another groom who also occupied a room over the stables. All of them were on board wages.

The question was, what persons were entitled to participate in the bequest to testator's "household servants":—Held: household servants had the same meaning as domestic servants; &, on the authority of Ogle v. Morgan, No. 143, ante, the gift included only those of testator's servants who boarded in the house, & took their meals there, & the coachman & grooms were not included.—Re DRAX, SAVILE v. YEATMAN (1887), 57 L. 149. Male nurse—Not sleeping on premises—Weekly wages.]—By his will testator, who died in Apr. 1912, bequeathed to each of his "domestic servants" who should have been in his service for two years prior to his decease the amount of one year's wages, free of duty. One of the claimants for this legacy was B., a certified male nurse & masseur, who was first engaged in 1907 by the receiver in lunacy of testator's estate as an assistant attendant on testator, at a weekly wage of a guinea. He did not sleep in the house, but took some of his meals there. From Nov. 1910, till testator's death, with one break, he was engaged on night duty, twelve hours at a time, & at a salary of two guineas a week paid every fourth week. Owing to the strain of this attendance, B. was obliged to take a holiday of four months in 1911 with the consent of the receiver, & received no salary during his absence. During his attendance he was free to undertake other work & did so to a limited extent. On a summons by the exors. of testator to determine whether B. was entitled to the legacy:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the will, B. was a domestic servant, the term "domestic" being equivalent to "household"; (2) although the service must be continuous for the period named, that did not involve service from day to day, & the suspension of the service with the consent of the master, did not disentitle B. to the legacy claimed.—Re LAWSON, WARDLEY v. BRINGLOE, [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 83 L. Prisoner was secretary of an enrolled building society the object of which was to enable members to obtain loans by way of mtge. His duties as defined by the rules, did not include the receipt of money; but the course of business, as defined by the rules, had not been strictly adhered to. Mtges. were made to the trustees; but when redeemed, the money was paid to him, In Feb. 1860, a mtge. was paid off, & the amount being paid to him, he embezzled it:—Held: the course of business was evidence from which the jury might infer that the money was received by him as servant, by virtue of his employment, for & on account of the trustees.—R. v. HASTIE (1863), Le. & Ca. 269; 1 New Rep. 335; 32 L. 155. Superintendent of police.]—By County Police Act, 1839 (c. 93), for the establishment of police constables, power is given to the justices of a county or division to appoint a chief constable, who, subject to the approval of two justices, has the power to appoint constables & superintendent constables. It was the duty of the constables of the county of S., so appointed, to account for & pay weekly to the superintendent of their division all moneys received by them, & it was the duty of the superintendent to return weekly to the chief constable a statement of such moneys. It was also the duty of the superintendent to pay the constables their wages weekly. In practice, however, it was the custom of the superintendent, in balancing the accounts with his men, to set off the sums received by them in the course of their duty against their wages, the balance struck going over to the next account, & so on from week to week without any money actually passing from one to the other. A constable having in this way accounted to the superintendent for the sum of £2 3*s.* 6*d.* received by the former, the latter fraudulently omitted that sum in his account with the chief constable, & subsequently denied its receipt:—Held: the superintendent was the clerk & servant of the chief constable, & the money might be alleged to have been received for & on his account.—R. v. BAXTER (1851), 5 Cox, C. 160. The visiting physician discharged a patient prematurely, whereby he spread the infection among his brothers & sisters. In an action by the father against the local authority to recover the expenses caused to him thereby, the jury found that there was a want of reasonable care & skill on the part of the visiting physician in discharging the patient, & that there was an undertaking by the local authority that their physician would act with reasonable care & skill in the discharge of the patient:—Held: the physician was not their servant for the purpose of discharging the patient; &, therefore, they were not liable.—EVANS v. LIVERPOOL CORPN. 163. The teachers in the school were appointed & paid, & were liable to be dismissed by deft. corpn. A teacher, who was joined as deft. in the action, directed pltf. during school hours to poke the fire & draw out the damper of the stove in the teachers' common room, where the teacher proposed to have her lunch. While pltf. was carrying out the order her pinafore caught fire & she was seriously burned. At the trial the jury found that the act of the teacher was negligent, & the judge of the Ct. of Appeal held that there was evidence to support the finding. The judge, after argument, directed judgment to be entered for deft. corpn., & pltf. appealed:—Held: the relation of master & servant existed between the local education authority & the teachers employed by them.—SMITH v. MARTIN & KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPN., [1911] 2 K. 164. Jobbing gardener.]—A jobbing gardener, employed under contract to work on certain days in the week in his employer's garden, with liberty to send a qualified substitute to do so when unable to attend in person, was found by justices not to have been a "male servant" within Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1869 (c. 14), s. 14 (3), so as to render the employer liable to excise licence duty in respect of him:—Held: the justices were right in so finding, the personal relationship of master & servant not having existed between the employer & the gardener.

A jobbing gardener is a perfectly familiar personage & is a tradesman, however humble, & is not a servant. . . . The jobbing gardener in this case if he could not come on any date, was to send a substitute. A servant contracts to render personal service & if illness or other lawful excuse prevents his rendering personal service he commits no breach of contract by his absence & is not bound to find a substitute; whereas a tradesman who contracts that a certain result shall be obtained—namely, a garden kept in order—may break his contract unless somebody keeps it in order (HAMILTON, J.).—BRADDELL v. BAKER (1911), 104 L. 166. ——.]—A local militia man hired himself to serve for a year, without disclosing to his master the fact that he was in the militia:—Held: this was not a lawful hiring within Poor Relief Act, 1690 (c. 11), s. 7, the servant not being sui juris, or capable of so hiring himself.

With reference to the meaning of the phrase "legally hired," it has been long established that the party hiring himself must be sui juris—must be capable of rendering that service which he contracts to render. Upon this principle neither a deserter from the King's service, nor an invalided soldier having leave of absence, nor a militia-man, can lawfully hire himself for a year so as to acquire a settlement (BAYLEY, J.).

To constitute a lawful hiring, the party must have ability to contract for the period during which he agrees to serve. Where a party is under a disability, he may, by disclosing it to the person with whom he contracts, make a conditional hiring; but if he conceal it, he makes an absolute contract which he is incapable of making, & which is, therefore, not a lawful hiring (PARKE, J.).—R. v. TAUNTON ST. B. Contracts Binding on Infants.

(a) In General.

See, generally, INFANTS, Vol. XXVIII., p. 153, 154, Nos. 131–140.

171. General rule—Contract for service binding.]—A deed of apprenticeship, whereby an infant apprentice is bound for a term not to accept employment except from the master or with his consent, & which contains no co-relative covenant by the master to provide employment for the apprentice, & which may be terminated by the master only, is invalid, as being unreasonable & not for the benefit of the infant.

A contract by an infant to learn a business or trade is primâ facie binding upon him. To this rule there are certain exceptions which are well defined & well known. Where the contract contains terms of an extraordinary & unusual character, which are not reasonable or for the benefit of the infant, the contract is void (FRY, L.J.).

It has been held at law from the time of Lord Coke & onwards, that an infant cannot bind himself to be liable to a penalty (FRY, L.J.).—DE FRANCESCO v. BARNUM (1890), 45 Ch. D. 430; 60 L. J. Ch. 63; 63 L. T. 438; 39 W. R. 5; 6 T. L. R. 463.

(b) What is a Beneficial Contract.

179. Contract of service primâ facie beneficial.]—Semble: a contract of hiring & service, for wages, is a contract beneficial to & binding upon an infant, though it contain clauses for referring disputes to arbn., & for the imposition of forfeitures in case of neglect of duty, to be deducted from the wages.

The ct. must see that on the whole he derives a benefit under the contract. Here he is hired & receives wages. It is clear he derives a benefit; he may also be subject to some inconveniences,

186. —— —— ——.]—(1) Deft., an infant, in consideration of being employed by pltfs. as a milk carrier, at a salary of 21*s.* per week, agreed not to carry on or serve in the business of a seller of milk within five miles of pltfs.' place of business for two years after leaving pltfs.' service. The agreement was terminable at a week's notice on either side. Deft. left pltfs.' service a few days after he came of age:—Held: the agreement, as a whole, was an agreement for the benefit of deft., & an injunction granted to restrain a breach it.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the infant from carrying on a milkman's business within the specified distance:—Held: the contract was binding on the infant, the clause as to the payment of the £200 only binding him to pay the damage actually caused by his breach of contract, & not being a penalty clause in the ordinary sense.—MORRISON, FLEET & CO., LTD. v. FLETCHER (1900), 17 T. 190. —— Restriction of compensation for accident—Agreement with insurance company—When reasonable for protection of funds.]—Pltf. entered the service of defts., a railway co., as a porter, when under age, & agreed to become a member, & to be bound by the rules, of an insurance society, formed among the employes of defts., towards the funds of which defts. contributed. He at the same time signed an agreement by which he accepted the contribution & the advantages to which he might be entitled under the rules of the society, in lieu of any claims against defts. under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42). The rules of the society covered all accidents, except such as arose wilfully or by gross negligence on the part of the member, & were not restricted to accidents for which the employers would be liable. The rules contained provisions for the limitation of the amount of temporary or permanent relief, these being less than the limit that can be recovered under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42); forfeiture of benefits in default of notice of an accident; forfeiture of claims for various breaches of the regulations, or in case of criminal misconduct; & reference of disputes to arbn. Pltf. sustained an injury by reason of an accident, & sued the railway co. At the time of the accident & of action brought pltf. was still an infant:—Held: (1) the agreement to become a member of the insurance society, & to be bound by its rules, was a part of a contract of service which it was competent for an infant to enter into; (2) the contract was an answer to the action, for the restrictive rules were such as an insurance society might reasonably make for the protection of their funds, & the contract taken as a whole was for the benefit of pltf. & binding on him.—CLEMENTS v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO., [1894] 2 Q. 196. —— ——.]—Deft., being then an infant, entered the service of pltfs., the proprietors of a daily paper in Sheffield, as a junior reporter, under a written contract which made the service determinable by a month's notice on either side, & provided that after leaving pltf.'s service deft. would not, either on his own account or in partnership with any other person, be connected, as proprietor, employee, or otherwise, with any newspaper business carried on in Sheffield or within a radius of twenty miles from the town hall thereof. There was evidence that such a restriction was almost unique in contracts of this kind:—Held: the restriction was void as being against public policy.

Even if the restriction could have been enforced against an adult, still, having regard to its unusual character, the contract was not for the benefit of an infant, & invalid on that ground also (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—LENG (SIR W. 203. —— ——.]—An infant entered into the service of a milk seller & covenanted not to carry on the same trade, & after he came of age he continued in the same service for eighteen months without repudiating the contract:—Held: this conduct amounted to a ratification of the contract in equity, & an injunction to restrain a breach of the covenant was granted.—CORNWALL v. HAWKINS (1872), 41 L. Annotation:—Distd. Walton v. Everington (1885), 1 T. L. R. 396.

205. —— Inference of new contract.]—Deft., three months before attaining his majority, signed a contract with pltf. to act as his clerk for twelve months, covenanting (inter alia), that if he left his service & were concerned in any similar business, he would not, under a penalty, then solicit his employer's customers. He remained with pltf. for two years, & being subsequently interested in a business of the same character, proceeded to solicit certain customers of pltf., with the help of a book which he had taken away with him, & information which he had obtained from another book entrusted to him while he had been in pltfs.' service. In an action brought for an injunction to restrain him from continuing to do this:—Held: assuming the original contract to be void, under Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), the ct. would infer that a new contract of service had been entered into by deft., &, in order to ascertain the terms of such fresh agreement, the ct. could look at those of the original contract.—WALTON v. EVERINGTON (1885), 1 T. L. R. 396.

206. —— ——.]—In Sept. 1880, deft. agreed to serve pltfs., a firm of law accountants, at a weekly salary of 30*s.*, or such other sum as might be agreed upon, & at the expiration of the agreement not to seek employment from or do work for persons who might at any time up to the expiration of the agreement have employed pltfs. At the time of the execution of the agreement deft. was a minor. After attaining twenty-one he continued in pltfs.' service for over four years, & his wages were raised from time to time. He left in Apr. 1892, & sought & obtained employment from persons who prior to that date were customers of pltfs.:—Held: it ought to be inferred from the conduct of the parties that a new contract between them, containing a stipulation by deft. in the terms of the agreement of Sept. 1886, not to seek employment or do work for former customers of pltfs., had been entered into after deft. attained twenty-one, & an injunction ought to be granted to restrain the breach of such stipulation.—BROWN v. HARPER (1893), 68 L. 217. —— Workman employed to export dredging machine.]—First count upon an agreement, by which pltf. was to take out a dredging machine to a port in the Black Sea, & be paid £50. Pltf. was examined as to a written agreement, which he said he had lost. A duplicate original, but unstamped, was tendered & that & the other duplicate had not been stamped. Pltf. had actually worked on board the vessel which carried out the dredging machine:—Held: the agreement was within the exemption of the Stamp Act, as an agreement for the hire of a "labourer or artificer," & admitted in evidence.—CORNFORTH v. DANUBE & BLACK SEA RY. 220. From finding of board & lodging.]—The examinations relating to a hiring & service were as follows:—"The pauper came to live with my father as a farm servant; he was not engaged for any particular time, but my father found him board, washing, lodging and clothes for so long a time as he stayed. He continued in my father's service, in that manner without leaving for two years, during all which time he lived and slept at my father's house":—Held: insufficient, as no hiring was stated in, or could be inferred from, the examinations.

There is no statement here that the pauper was hired, or contracted or agreed to stay with his master. It is a very different thing to infer a hiring for a year from a general hiring, & to infer a hiring from the fact of finding food & lodging (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—R. v. CATTERAL (INHABITANTS) (1844), 5 Q. 223. —— ——.]—The pauper having lived with his uncle upon charity was afterwards hired as a yearly servant by another person, whom he served accordingly, at the expiration of which he returned to his uncle upon an invitation from him, that if he would come & live with him as before he would make it better for him than a common service, & lived with him several years in the parish of A. performing the work of a servant in husbandry; during the time he so lived with his uncle, the latter promised that if he continued with him for his life he would leave him his farm & stock, but he received no wages:—Held: he gained no settlement in A.—R. v. STOKESLEY (INHABITANTS) (1796), 6 Term Rep. 757; 101 E. R. 811.

224. —— Child serving father—After termination of hiring.]—Where a female natural child was hired for a year by the wife of its reputed father, & continued doing the household work for three years, but after the first year no wages were paid, nor was there any new contract of hiring:—Held: the sessions were warranted in finding that after that time she did not continue on the terms of the original hiring.

Where the parties are not related, it may fairly be presumed from a continuance in the service that the terms on which they continue are the same as during the preceding year. But where the relation of father & child subsists the ground for that presumption fails (BAYLEY, J.).—R. v. SOW (INHABITANTS) (1817), 1 B. & Ald. 178; 106 E. R. 66.

Deft. proposed to go into evidence to show that pltf. had co-habited with him:—Held: he might do so on the plea of non assumpsit, as this went to show that there was no contract between the parties, & not to invalidate any contract on the ground of illegality.

If an express contract had been proved, & deft. had attempted to set up that the contract was not only for service but for co-habitation, deft. could not have set that up without pleading it. Pltf. endeavours to show by acts of service that there was a contract. Deft. wishes the jury to infer that there was no contract of hiring & service; he is not seeking to discharge himself from any contract, but to show that there was no contract at all (CRESSWELL, J.).—BRADSHAW v. HAYWARD (1842), Car. & M. 591, N. Deft. acted elsewhere without permission. Pltf. applied for an injunction to restrain deft. from acting at any theatre other than that where pltf.'s co. played. Deft., in an affidavit in opposition to the application alleged that pltf. had verbally promised that deft., should act in certain parts but had not kept the promise:—Held: the alleged verbal promise could not without evidence of bad faith on the part of pltf. be considered in construing the contract, & the allotting of parts to deft. was no part of the consideration of the contract.—GRIMSTON v. CUNINGHAM, [1894] 1 Q. Pltf. proposed by letter to enter into deft.'s service as salesman; the term of service was to be for one year, & a list of customers was to be drawn up. Deft. replied by letter stating that the terms of pltf.'s letter required further definition, but requesting him to come on an appointed day. Pltf. entered upon deft.'s service, but was dismissed before the expiration of the year with a month's notice. Pltf. having sued for a wrongful dismissal, at the trial, evidence was tendered of a custom to dismiss salesmen at a month's notice; the judge rejected the evidence, on the ground that the letters contained a complete contract in writing:—Held: the evidence was admissible, as the contract in the letters was incomplete.—APPLEBY v. JOHNSON (1874), L. During the currency of the contract & within less than a year of its termination the parties verbally agreed to a variation of pltf.'s salary for a part of the remainder of the engagement. Subsequently pltf. sued defts. to recover salary earned since the verbal agreement, at the rate specified in the original contract:—Held: the verbal agreement, being one which was to be performed within a year, &, therefore, not within Stat. Applt. was employed by resps. at their colliery upon the terms that he should be paid wages according to the weight of coal gotten by him; that he should not leave his employment without giving fourteen days' notice, & that deductions should be made in respect of dirt sent up to the surface with the coal; & the following special mode of determining those deductions was agreed upon between resps. & the persons employed by them:—About one tub in twenty sent up to the surface was selected at random for testing. The dirt in that tub was separated from the coal & weighed, & if the tub contained more than a certain weight of dirt, the man who sent it up was not paid anything in respect of the coal therein. The men sending up the other nineteen tubs were paid on the total weight of the contents of each tub as though it contained coal only:—Held: the proviso in Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 12, was controlled by the first part of that sect., & did not authorise any agreement by which a person employed was not to be paid on the weight of the coal in a particular tub; the agreement with respect to the special mode of making deductions for dirt was therefore illegal, but the illegality in that respect did not vitiate the whole contract of employment so as to justify applt. in leaving without giving fourteen days' notice.

The rule is that if the consideration is tainted with illegality, either in whole or in part, all the promises depending on that consideration must fail; but if the consideration be not tainted with illegality, either wholly or in part, then if one of the several promises depending upon it be illegal in itself & the others legal, the legal promises stand & may be enforced (A. of W.'s services, agreed to pay W. on Saturday in every week during term such wages as articles made by W. should amount to at their usual workmen's prices:—Held: the agreement showed liability on the part of G. to provide W. with work so long as the service continued, & was not void for want of mutuality, & might be enforced under stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3.

246. —— Good consideration for promise to serve.]—Pltfs. agreed in writing with L., that he should serve them for seven years as a Crown-glass maker; that he should not during that term work for any other person without their licence; that they might deduct from his wages any fine he might incur for breach of their rules; that during any depression of trade he should be paid a moiety of his wages; that if he should be sick or lame, pltfs. should be at liberty to employ any other person in his stead, without paying him any wages; that pltfs. should pay him, so long as he should be employed & work as a crown-glass maker, certain wages by the piece, & £8 a year, in lieu of house rent & firing; & that pltfs. should have the option of dismissing him from their service on giving him a month's notice or a month's wages:—Held: this agreement bound pltfs. to employ L. during the seven years, subject to the above power of dismissal; there was, therefore, a good consideration for L.'s contract to serve for the seven years.—PILKINGTON v. SCOTT (1846), 15 M. & W. 657; 15 L. 252. —— Theatrical engagement.]—Pltf. the manager of a London theatre, engaged deft., a provincial actor desirous of appearing on the London stage, for two years. Though there was nothing expressed on the subject, the ct. inferred an engagement on the part of pltf. to employ deft. for a reasonable time, & on the part of deft. not to perform elsewhere. Pltf. having, under these circumstances, delayed deft.'s appearance for five months, deft. broke his engagement & went to another theatre:—Held: he had a right so to do, & pltf. was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent his performing there.—FECHTER v. MONTGOMERY (1863), 33 Beav. 22; 55 E. But if the contract is one of service, then the commission is merely intended to be in the place of salary, & the contract cannot be determined without compensation to the servant. Deft., who carried on business in India, appointed pltf. to be his sole buying agent in Great Britain for ten years, deft. to send all orders to pltf., who

255. Contract terminable on notice—Wages payable at stated periods.]—A workman entered into an agreement with a coal co. to serve them as a collier, in consideration of wages to be paid to him fortnightly; & the co., in consideration of such service, agreed that he should not be discharged without twenty-eight days' notice in writing, unless in the case of misconduct:—Held: this contract necessarily implied an obligation on the part of the master to find work for the servant, & to pay him wages every fortnight; &, consequently, was not bad for want of mutuality.—WHITTLE v. FRANKLAND (1862), 2 B. & S. 49; 31 L. Subsequently deft., previously to going up to pass his examination, executed, at the request of pltf., a bond, which was conditioned to be void if deft. should not practice within certain limits, but which contained no express agreement on the part of pltf. to continue deft.'s employment. Deft. remained in pltf.'s employment for about three months afterwards, & was then dismissed. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, & a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held: an agreement by pltf. to continue deft.'s employment on the old terms could be inferred; there was consideration to support the bond; & pltf. was entitled to an injunction.—GRAVELY v. BARNARD (1874), L. 258. Remuneration by piece work.]—There was an obligation on the part of the employers not merely to pay for the work done, but also to employ the men; not, I think, necessarily to find them work day by day, but an obligation to continue the relation of master & servant; so that if the master causelessly refused to give the servant work, whilst the colliery was open, he would have broken his contract. On May 3, 1917, some of deft.'s workmen, not including pltf., went out on strike & defts. closed their works until May 11, 1917, when pltf. returned to work. He was thus prevented from earning his wages as a piece worker during the aforesaid period, & he applied to a munitions tribunal for compensation, but the tribunal decided that he had not been dismissed from his employment, & refused to award compensation:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to either a contractual or statutory notice, & consequently could not demand that a reasonable amount of work should be provided for him by deft.—HULME v. FERRANTI, [1918] 2 K. 262. Contract to serve for life—Validity.]—Pltf., by deed, sold to defts. his trade & business, as a carrier between London & Wisbech, &, in consideration of the covenants therein contained on defts.' part, covenanted with them that he would not thenceforth during his life exercise the trade of a carrier, except as thereinafter mentioned; & that he would thenceforth during his life, faithfully serve defts. as an assistant in the trade of a carrier: & defts., in consideration of the before mentioned covenants, & of pltf.'s faithful service as aforesaid, covenanted to pay him a certain weekly sum for his life. In an action against defts. on this covenant:—Held: pltf.'s covenant to serve during his life was good in law, & the covenant in restraint of his trade was not void, inasmuch as he was not absolutely restrained from carrying on the trade, but only from carrying it on in any other way than as an assistant to the defts.

agreement; though such unstamped writing cannot be received as evidence for the purpose of proving the agreement between the parties, yet the sessions may look at it for the purpose of seeing when it ceased to operate, in order to guide them in receiving parol evidence of service for the last four years, at wages; from whence the sessions might presume a yearly contract.

If there were only a general hiring, the law presume, that it is for a year; & if the rate of wages were not specified, he would be entitled to reasonable wages. . . . the law says that they [the sessions] may make such a presumption when there is nothing to repel it (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—R. v. PENDLETON (INHABITANTS) (1812), 15 East, 449; 104 E. 271. —— ——.]—The pauper asked an innkeeper for a place, who replied he had no objection, & put him on as ostler, saying, that he did not mean him to have a settlement. No earnest or wages were given, but the pauper was to have what he got as ostler. The pauper lodged & boarded in the master's house. The pauper could have left at any time he pleased; or the master might have turned him away at any time. The pauper lived with the innkeeper as ostler, under the above terms, more than a year:—Held: this was not a general, or yearly hiring, & no settlement was gained by service under it.

I do not consider that under a general hiring the parties are at liberty to separate when they please; on the contrary, I think that the one is bound to serve, & the other bound to employ, for a year; &, that if that is not the understanding the hiring is not general, but is a hiring for a less period than a year. A general hiring is, in contemplation of law, a hiring for a year (BAYLEY, J.).—R. v. GREAT BOWDEN (INHABITANTS) (1827), 7 B. & C. 249; 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 13; 1 Man. & Ry. M. C. 39; 6 L. J. O. S. 275. —— —— ——.]—An order of removal was made upon the examination of the pauper, which stated—"In 1828, when I was fifteen years old, I went to work at Messrs. C. & D.'s factory in P. There was a custom in the mill requiring the workpeople to give a fortnight's notice before leaving their employment. I remained in that employment better than two years, during the whole of which time I resided & slept in P.; I worked under the custom as to giving notice, & I was compelled to serve a fortnight's notice before leaving."

The grounds of appeal traversed the hiring, service, residence & settlement, in fact; & objected, that the examination was bad on the face of it, & did not warrant the order of removal, that it did not show or contain any legal evidence of the settlement in P. nor state sufficient facts to show that the pauper gained a settlement by hiring & service therein.

At the trial of the appeal, it was proved, on the part of resps., that, in 1828, the pauper went to work as a piecer at C. & D.'s cotton mill. He was to serve them, the master spinners; but the practice of such mills is, that the piecers assist certain spinners to whom respectively they are attached. The spinner receives the whole wages from the master spinners for the work done with such assistance, & thereout pays the piecers whom he engages & dismisses, without the interference of the master spinners. The pauper was engaged by E., a spinner, & served under him more than a year; & was paid his wages every fortnight by E.

It was objected, by applts. that there was no proof of a yearly or general hiring; & that the service being to E. varied from that stated in the examination. The sessions, however, overruled the objections, & confirmed the order:—Held: (1) the facts of the case were sufficient to prove a general hiring: (2) the sessions, having confirmed the order subject to the opinion of this ct. on the objections, must be presumed to have found that the hiring by E. was a hiring by C. & D. as stated in the examination, & the facts stated warranted such finding.

Hiring is a most difficult question of law. The justices of the peace may possibly have asked the pauper whether he was hired or not: the answer may have been, "I do not know what you call hired, but I will tell you what took place on the occasion"; & then he may possibly state facts, & if those facts which appear in the statement of the pauper amount to evidence of a hiring for a year, then the justices may properly adjudicate that the settlement was gained, & remove the party upon it; & they must govern their opinion by the effect of such statement, if it appear to amount to any evidence of facts sufficient for such a hiring (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—R. v. PILKINGTON (INHABITANTS) (1844), 5 Q. 277. —— —— Although wages paid monthly.]—The law founded upon usage, which justifies the discharge of domestic servants on giving a month's notice, though there was a yearly hiring, does not apply to a person in the situation of a clerk to an army agent, receiving a salary of £500 a year.

If a servant is hired generally, he is considered as hired for a year, that both master & servant may have the benefit of all the seasons. In the case of household servants, it is the custom to give only a month's notice, but I know of no practice or usage, nor is there any evidence given of any usage, applying to the case of servants of the description of this pltf. As to the monthly payments, though the hiring was for a year, yet payments may be made at more frequent intervals. If it had been proved that pltf. betrayed the secrets of his employer, or was guilty of other misconduct, that would justify his dismissal without any notice at all (BEST, C.J.).—BEESTON v. COLLYER (1827), 2 C. & P. 607, N. 326. Presumption capable of rebuttal.]—The rule, that an indefinite hiring is a hiring for a year, is not an inflexible rule of law; it must be considered in connection with the circumstances of the particular case.

A. was engaged as editor of a new periodical publication by B. at a salary to be paid weekly. The publication was abandoned by B. soon after its commencement. In an action by A. against B. for dismissing him before the termination of a year, a usage was proved that such a hiring was annual, with regard to established periodicals:—Held: the jury were properly directed to consider whether such usage was applicable to a newly started publication.—BAXTER v. NURSE (1844), 6 Man. & G. 935; 7 Scott, N. duration of the service; but pltf. was paid weekly a sum equal to a week's salary. Pltf. having been dismissed with a month's notice:—Held: it was properly left to the jury to say whether the last hiring was on the same terms as the first, & whether the terms of the previous hiring were determined by the acceptance of a month's wages, instead of notice.

357. —— Servant entering another service.]—Five days before the end of the year a servant absented himself by leave one day from his master's service to look out for another place, & on his return the master on some trivial pretence said he should not stay any longer in his service, & offered him a trifle less than his whole wages; which the servant refused; but was then ready to have accepted his whole wages, though he would rather have staid out his year; & immediately applied to a magistrate to oblige his master either to pay him the whole or to receive him into his service for the remainder of the year; when the magistrate ordered half a crown to be deduced; & the servant thereupon hired himself to another master, before his first year was out; & after the year received from his first master his whole wages:—Held: this was a dissolution of he contract before the end of the year by mutual consent, signified on the part of the servant by his entering into another service.—R. v. LEIGH (INHABITANTS) (1806), 7 East, 539; 3 Smith, K. R. 519.

359. —— Temporary employment of servant in different capacity—Without remuneration.]—A., who had been the farm servant of B. but who had ceased to be so, was employed by B. to collect his debts, it being B.'s intention to go to America, & to take A. with him, & set him up there in business for himself. There was no agreement for any remuneration to be paid by B. to A. for collecting the debts:—Held: A. could not be convicted on this evidence of embezzling the sums received by him on behalf of B. as the prisoner's service ended when the farm was given up, & no new service was created.—R. v. HOARE (1859), 1 F. & F. 647.

360. Imprisonment on charge of felony — Preferred by mistress—Charge subsequently withdrawn.]—Pltf. went into the service of deft. as servant on Nov. 19, with wages at the rate of £12 12*s.* the year. A few days before the termination of the second month she was sent to prison on a charge of felony made by her mistress, which was afterwards abandoned. She remained in confinement for four days of the third month, when she was liberated, there being no charge substantiated against her. She then demanded three months' wages: wages for two months were tendered; those for the third were refused, upon the ground that the service had ceased when she was given into custody before the complete expiration of the second month:—Held: the wages for the third month might be recovered on a general count for work & labour, as the imprisonment of pltf. by deft. on a charge subsequently abandoned did not amount to a dissolution of the contract, & the relation of master & servant still subsisted, though in a slight degree.—SMITH v. GAINSFORD (1836), 2 Hodg. 109; 5 L. 361. Insanity of servant — Contract not terminated.]—A yearly servant, being deprived of his reason forty days before the end of the year, was taken home by his father who lived in another parish, & who received the wages for the whole year:—Held: the servant was settled in the master's parish though he continued in his father's house during the remainder of the year.

363. Insanity of master—Whether operative as dismissal of servant—Effect of lunacy order.]—(1) Bequest of a legacy to the servant of testatrix, in consideration of her long & faithful services, to be paid within twelve months after the decease of testatrix, provided she remains in my service till my death. The servant was in the service of testatrix for twenty-one years, when one of the next of kin of testatrix caused testatrix to be removed to a lunatic asylum, & upon her own authority dismissed the servant, who was desirous to continue in the service of her mistress. Subsequently an order in lunacy was obtained by the next of kin by which it was declared that testatrix had been ascertained to be of unsound mind, & her furniture & effects were directed to be sold : —Held : the order in lunacy operated as a dismissal of the servant, & the conditional legacy to her therefore failed.

(2) Semble : the mere circumstances of testatrix becoming of unsound mind did not per se operate as a dismissal of the servant.—Re HARTLEY'S TRUSTS (1878), 47 L. J. Ch. 610 ; 26 W. R. 590.

SUB-SECT. 5.—SUBSEQUENT CONTRACT BETWEEN PARTIES.

364. Re-hiring of servant for definite period—After general hiring.]—A pauper was hired three weeks before Martinmas at £4 wages, & received 1*s.* earnest, but no period was mentioned for duration of the service. The pauper went into the service a week after Martinmas, & upon the same day his master told him that it was not the custom to hire servants in that parish for more than fifty-one weeks, that he forgot to mention it at the time when he hired him, & therefore, that, if he had no objection, he would hire him again for fifty-one weeks, & give him another shilling for earnest. The pauper accepted it, & remained in the service till the following Martinmas. There not having been a year's service, the sessions held that there had been a dissolution of the original contract, & not a dispensation with the week's service :—Held : that was a question of fact for the sessions, & they having determined it, this ct. refused to disturb their decision.—R. v. BOTTESFORD (INHABITANTS) (1825), 4 B. & C. 84 ; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 99 ; 3 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 24 ; 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 152 ; 107 E. R. 990.

365. Engagement in different character.] —A contract by which a servant hires himself to a master as a footman & groom is not dissolved by a subsequent contract by which he engages to bind himself to serve in a different character, at higher wages & in a foreign country, although the servant accompanies his master into such foreign country, the service performed abroad being the same as that originally contracted for.—R. v. BUCKINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1834), 5 B. & Ad. 953 ; 3 Nev. & M. K. B. 72 ; 2 Nev. & M. M. C. 42 ; 3 L. J. M. C. 64 ; 110 E. R. 1043.

366. Where contracts inconsistent.]—In Apr. 1865, A. was, under Poor Relief Act, 1819 (c. 12), s. 7, elected by the vestry of the parish of West Malling, & duly appointed by two justices, assistant overseer of the parish, at a salary of £20 a year. The warrant of appointment defined his duties, amongst which were the collection of poor rates & the keeping of accounts. In June, 1865, deft. became surety for A. in a bond to the guardians of the union which comprised West Malling, the condition of which bond was that A. should faithfully perform all the duties of his office, & in all matters relating thereto obey the overseers, subject to the orders of the poor law board, & keep books, & pay over moneys to such persons as the overseers should direct.

In Apr. 1866, the board of guardians of the Malling Union, on the recommendation of the vestry of West Malling, appointed A. collector of the poor rates for West Malling at a poundage of 6*d.* The poor law board duly approved the appointment, & made an order fixing the remuneration of the collector at 6*d.* in the pound, as proposed. The duties under the two appointments were substantially the same. After the last appointment A. continued to perform the same duties as he had before performed, & the appointment of Apr. 1865, was not otherwise resigned or revoked. A. having made default, after the last appointment, in keeping books & in paying over money, deft. was sued on the bond :—Held : the two appointments were inconsistent & incompatible—the appointment of Apr. 1865, ceased, by virtue of Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 62, on A.'s acceptance of the appointment by the guardians in 1866 ; & consequently the liability of deft. as surety on the bond was at an end.

Semble : there was, under the circumstances, both a revocation of the first appointment by the vestry, & a resignation by A.—MALLING UNION v. GRAHAM (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 201 ; 39 L. J. C. P. 74 ; 22 L. T. 789 ; 18 W. R. 674.

376. Annual service with militia.]—A servant at the time of hiring for a year told his intended master that he had served in the local militia for the preceding year & that he expected to be called out again in the year then current. It was therefore agreed that he should allow his master to deduct out of his wages 1*s.* a day for as many days as he should be absent on service with the militia. He served his master under this hiring for the year, except fourteen days, during which he served in the militia & for which a deduction was made as agreed:—Held: this was a good conditional hiring & The Militia Act (48 Geo. 3, c. 111) having declared that service under the Act should not be deemed an absence from the service of a master, there was a year's service, sufficient for the purpose of settlement.—R. v. ELMLEY CASTLE (INHABITANTS) (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 826; 1 L. The rules of the fund provided that in case of the death of a member his nominee or legal personal representative was to be entitled to a sum of money, but that no person leaving the society's employment of his own accord should have any claim upon the fund. In Sept. 1914, pltf.'s husband enlisted in the army on the terms of a notice issued by the society that on his return from military service he would be re-employed by the society, or if he was not fit for the society's service he would be allowed to go upon the provident fund. In Oct. 1915, he was killed on active service. In an action by his widow against the trustees of the fund to recover benefits in accordance with the rules:—Held: though pltf. would have been entitled to recover the benefits claimed if her husband had remained in the service of the society & had remained a member of the fund until his death, yet his contract of service did not continue after his enlistment, & as the provision with regard to the loss of benefits on leaving the society's employment could not be held to be contrary to public policy merely because pltf.'s husband had left the society's employment in order to enlist, pltf. was not entitled to recover.—JOYCE v. EBURY (LORD) (1916), 33 T. In the factory, a printed notice was stuck up that no servant should leave without a fortnight's notice. J. left without notice, & was summoned for absenting himself without lawful excuse:—Held: the justices might have inferred from the circumstances that the fourteen days' notice did form part of the contract, though nothing expressly had been stated between the parties, & the justices were wrong if they found the contract did not include such notice, merely because it was not in writing, or because nothing express had been stated on the subject.—RIDEOUT v. JENKINSON (1874), 38 J. Resp. left his work without notice, but it was not proved that his attention had been called to the rules, or that he had seen them or assented to them, or was able to read. The justices held that there was not sufficient evidence of a contract to justify a conviction of resp. under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 141, s. 9, & they refused to admit evidence of custom:—Held: the rules as they were posted, or a well known custom in the district, might be sufficient to establish a contract if found as a fact to exist.—CARUS v. EASTWOOD (1875), 32 L. 431. Right to give notice before end of first fortnight—To determine service at end of first month—Whether court will take judicial notice of custom.]—(1) A custom with regard to the hiring of domestic servants, to the effect that, in the absence of special contract, there is a right, on the part of either the master or the servant, to determine the service, at the end of the first calendar month, by notice given at or before the expiration of the first fortnight, is not a notorious custom of which the cts. will take judicial notice, but where such a custom is relied on, its existence must be proved by evidence in each particular case. Such a custom is not unreasonable; & therefore, if, in any particular case, its existence were sufficiently proved by evidence, the ct. would give effect to it.

(2) There is the custom of a month's notice or a month's wages, which is so well known that every person who is hired as a domestic servant is taken to be engaged on those terms, unless there is an express stipulation to the contrary (CHANNELL, J.).—MOULT v. HALLIDAY, [1898] 1 Q. B. 125; 67 L. J. Q. B. 451; 77 L. T. 794; 62 J. P. 8; 46 W. R. 318; 14 T. L. R. 109; 42 Sol. Jo. 117, D. C.

432. —— —— ——.]—Pltf., a domestic servant, entered deft.'s service on Nov. 3, 1910, at yearly wages payable monthly, there being no express agreement as to notice. On Nov. 17, she gave notice to leave at the expiration of the first month of her service. She accordingly left on Dec. 3, & upon deft. refusing to pay her the wages for the month during which she had been in the service, upon the ground that she had left without giving one month's notice, she brought an action in the county ct. to recover the month's wages, alleging a custom that either party to the contract of the hiring of a domestic servant was entitled, in the absence of special agreement as to notice, to determine the service at the end of the first month by notice given at or before the expiration of the first fortnight. Pltf. called no evidence in support of the custom. The county ct. judge said that he had taken judicial notice of the custom in previous cases, & he would take judicial notice of it in this case. He accordingly gave judgment for pltf. for the amount claimed:—Held: (1) the county ct. judge was entitled to take judicial notice of the custom; (2) apart from the custom, & assuming that pltf. wrongfully left deft.'s service, she was entitled to recover the month's wages which had already accrued due to her.—GEORGE v.

Issue thereon:—Held: although the plea might be bad on special demurrer, as putting in issue an immaterial allegation in the declaration, yet, as issue had been taken on the plea, pltf.'s misconduct, as well as the fact of his dismissal, were in issue, & consequently evidence of such misconduct offered at the trial by deft. was improperly rejected, & the onus of such proof lay on deft.—LUSH v. RUSSELL (1850), 5 Exch. 203; 1 L. Plea, that pltf. requested deft. to give her leave to absent herself from his service during the night, & that he refused such leave, & forbade her from so absenting herself & that against his will she nevertheless absented herself for the night, & until the following day, whereupon he discharged her. Replication, that when pltf. requested deft. to give her leave to absent herself from his service, her mother had been seized with sudden & violent sickness, & was in imminent danger of death, & believing herself likely to die, requested pltf. to visit her to see her before her death, whereupon pltf. requested deft. to give her leave to absent herself for that purpose, she not being like thereby to cause any injury or hindrance to his domestic affairs & not intending to be thereby guilty of any improper omission or unreasonable delay of her duties ; & because deft. wrongfully & unjustly forbade her from so absenting herself for the purpose of visiting her mother, etc., she left his house & service, & absented herself for that purpose for the time mentioned in the plea, the same being a reasonable time in that behalf, & she not causing thereby any hindrance to his domestic affairs, nor being thereby guilty of any improper omission or unreasonable delay of her duties, as she lawfully might, etc. :—Held : (1) on demurrer the plea was good, as showing a dismissal for disobedience to a lawful order of the master, & the replication was bad, as showing no sufficient excuse for such disobedience.

(2) There may undoubtedly be cases justifying a wilful disobedience of such an order ; as when the servant apprehends danger to her life, or violence to her person, from the master ; or where from an infectious disorder raging in the house, she must go out for the preservation of her life. But the general rule is obedience, & wilful disobedience is a sufficient ground for dismissal (ALDERSON, B.).

466. Question for jury.]—Primâ facie, the construction of written documents is for the judge ; but, where it is shown by extrinsic evidence that the terms are ambiguous, evidence is admissible to explain the ambiguity ; & then it is for the jury to say in which sense the ambiguous expressions were used. A. was engaged by B. as clerk, under a contract for hiring for two years, to conduct the business of a shipping agent at Southampton. In the course of such employ, it was the duty of A. to pay freight, dock-dues, etc., to meet which B. remitted the necessary funds. A. wrote to B. for a remittance of £140 inclosing an account of the purposes for which it was required, one of them being the payment of £30 for salary due to himself. Ten days afterwards, B. sent A. £100 inclosed in a letter directing him to apply the money for business purposes ; A. having appropriated £30 of the money in satisfaction of his salary, B. discharged him. In assumpsit by A. against B. for breach of the contract of hiring, B. pleaded a plea justifying the discharge of A. on the ground of his having wrongfully & improperly misappropriated the money remitted, & wrongfully & improperly disobeyed B.'s orders to apply the money to business purposes. The judge left it to the jury to say whether plaintiff had been guilty of any wrongful & improper misappropriation of the moneys entrusted to him by deft., or of any wrongful or improper disobedience of orders :—Held : (1) this was a proper direction ; & the judge was not bound to tell the jury that it was not necessary, to justify the dismissal of pltf., that he should have been guilty of any moral delinquency ; (2) in awarding a sum equal to twelve months' salary, pltf. having been discharged after about one quarter's service, the jury had not given excessive damages.—SMITH v. THOMPSON (1849), 8 C. 471. Refusal to go to employer — Railway engineer.]—Pltf., a civil engineer, was employed by deft., a railway contractor, as resident engineer on one of deft.'s railways, at a salary, subject to three months' notice on either side. Pltf. alleged that it was understood between them that he should be at liberty to occupy his time in other business besides that of deft., but this was denied by deft. Pltf. came up to London twice at request of deft. on business between them, & on each occasion deft. paid pltf. his travelling expenses just before he set off to return. Deft. telegraphed & wrote to pltf. to come up a third time, when pltf. answered first by telegraph that the message had come too late for him to go on the day deft. required him, then by letter, "I am sorry that at present I cannot comply with your wishes as I am too much engaged in preparing for the action I have brought against the railway co. At the latter end of the week I shall have pleasure in attending your wishes." Deft. in answer, after alluding to this telegram & letter, wrote, "I have therefore to request you to take notice that your engagement with me terminated on the above-named Aug. 2, the date of pltf.'s letter, & that I shall not consider any salary due to you under our agreement beyond that date." In reply, pltf. wrote, "Had you sent me the necessary funds to carry out your instructions, I should at once have attended to them." In an action for wrongful dismissal, & work & materials, to which deft. pleaded a justification & an inspectorship-deed:—Held: this was a wilful & inexcusable disobedience on the part of pltf. of deft.'s lawful order.—MORGAN v. SAVIN (1867), 16 L. 474. Justifiable ground for dismissal.] — Pltf., a seaman, declared against a shipowner on an agreement, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 18, ss. 2, 3, to employ pltf. as carpenter's mate of a vessel during a south sea voyage, & to pay him, by way of wages, on discharge & sale of the cargo, a stated proportion of the net proceeds: breach, that deft. wrongfully discharged pltf. before the end of the voyage, whereby his wages were lost. Plea: that it was by the agreement stipulated that pltf. should not cause disobedience of orders or mutiny on board the ship, & that the wages should not be due unless pltf. should have well & truly performed the voyage according to the agreement: that, during the voyage, the master died, whereupon S., the first mate, became & was & exercised the duties of master till the completion of the voyage; & that pltf., afterwards & during the voyage, refused to perform his duty as carpenter's mate, though commanded by S. so to do, & mutinously refused to proceed on the voyage, & tried to excite mutiny & disobedience; wherefore deft. discharged pltf. Replication, that, although S. became & was & exercised the duties as master on board the ship in manner, etc., nevertheless, etc., de injuria sua absque residuo causæ. Issue thereon. On the trial it appeared that S. was a foreigner, disqualified to command the vessel by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 54, s. 16: that S. after taking the command, required the crew to sign a fresh agreement with himself: & that pltf. & others refused, & refused also to do duty on board the ship unless in taking her to an English port:—Held: pltf., having admitted, by his replication, that S. was master, could not, under such allegation de injuria, etc., offer evidence of his disqualification; & the refusal to navigate the ship unless to an English port was mutiny against the master de facto, & bore out the justification.—RENNO v. BENNETT (1842), 3 Q. 483. Whether justification for dismissal—Temporary illness.]—Pltf., by agreement in writing, agreed to serve deft. for the term of ten years in the capacity of a brewer: in consideration of the premises, & "of the due, full & complete service" of pltf. "as aforesaid," deft. agreed to pay pltf. £20 on execution of the agreement, to furnish him with a house & coals "during the whole of the said term of ten years," & to pay him "the weekly sum of £2 10*s.* during the said term of ten years." Pltf. entered into deft.'s service under the agreement. Some years afterwards, pltf. fell ill, & was unable to attend personally to business; but during that time he instructed deft., at deft.'s request, in the art of brewing. Deft. refused to pay pltf. his wages for the period during which he had been ill, but retained him in the service; &, after he was able to attend again personally to business, paid him as before under the agreement. To an action by pltf. to recover wages for the period during which he had been ill, deft. pleaded that pltf. was not, during any part of the time for which such wages were claimed, ready & willing or able to render, & did not in fact during any part of such time render, the agreed or any service:—Held: the averment that pltf. was not ready & willing, etc., was not supported by his physical inability, for a time only, & not through his own default, to attend personally to the business: & the contract not having been rescinded, deft. was not entitled to suspend the weekly payments during that time; & pltf. was therefore entitled to a verdict.

If pltf., from unskilfulness, had been wholly incompetent to brew, or by the visitation of God he had become from paralysis or any other bodily illness permanently incompetent to act in the capacity of brewer for deft., we think that deft. might have determined the contract. He could not be considered incompetent by illness of a temporary nature; but if he had been struck with disease so that he could never be expected to return to his work, we think deft. ought to have dismissed him & employed another brewer in his stead (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—CUCKSON v. STONES (1858), 1 E. & E. 248; 28 L. By the arts. of assocn. it was provided that deft. should be managing director for five years at the yearly salary mentioned in the agreement, payable quarterly. Afterwards the co. by a written instrument adopted the agreement between the promoter & deft. Deft., on behalf of the co., contracted for the construction of certain fishing smacks, &, unknown to the co., took a commission from the shipbuilders on the contract. Several months afterwards pltf. co. at an extraordinary meeting passed a resolution dismissing deft. from his office on the ground of other alleged acts of misconduct, which they were not able to substantiate in the action: being at that time ignorant of his receipt of the commission from the shipbuilders. Deft. was a shareholder in an ice co. & a fish carrying co., which paid, in addition to the ordinary dividends, bonuses to shareholders who were owners of fishing smacks & who employed the cos. in supplying ice & carrying for them. Deft. employed these cos. in respect of pltfs.' smacks, & received bonuses as if the smacks were his own. Pltf. co. brought an action against deft. for an account of commissions & bonuses received by him, & for damages for alleged breaches of duty; & deft. counterclaimed for wrongful dismissal & for the salary for the quarter which had expired before his dismissal:—Held: (1) the receipt of a commission from the shipbuilding co. was good ground for dismissal, although it was not discovered till after the dismissal had taken place; & although it happened several months previously, & might have been an isolated act, deft. must account to pltfs. for the bonuses received from the ice & carrying cos., as they had been paid in respect of pltfs.' smacks: although pltfs. could not themselves have received the bonuses, not being shareholders of the cos.; (2) the contract between pltfs. & deft. was contained in the agreement between the promoter & deft. as adopted by the co., & was not modified by the arts. of assocn., the salary was consequently payable yearly & not quarterly, &, therefore, deft. having been dismissed for misconduct was not entitled to any part of the unpaid salary for the current year of his service.

salary payable monthly, & it was paid at the end of each month down to the end of May, 1915. Before that date pltf. had been guilty of misconduct justifying dismissal, & in Oct. 1915, he was dismissed, but this misconduct, although suspected, was not made the ground of dismissal. Pltf. brought an action for wrongful dismissal claiming (a) salary for the months between May & Oct. 1915, & (b) damages, & at the trial defts. relied on the misconduct which took place before May, 1915, & on the contention that after that date pltf.'s omission to confess his misconduct was a breach of his contract. The jury found that the dismissal was justified, & the question of pltf.'s right to salary for the months between May & Oct. 1915, was left to the judge:—Held: pltf.'s right to salary became vested at the end of each month, his omission to disclose his own misdoing was not a breach of contract, & the right of defts. to determine the contract in Oct. 1915, by reason of antecedent misconduct subsequently discovered did not entitle them to treat it as determined from any date earlier than Oct. 1915, & therefore pltf. was entitled to recover salary for the months between May & Oct. 1915.—HEALEY v. SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME FRANÇAISE RUBASTIC, [1917] 1 K. ii. Conduct Inconsistent with Service.

507. General rule.]—Pltf. had been employed as clerk by defts., who were merchants, for many years, & ultimately they agreed to retain him in their employment for a term of ten years. Before the expiration of that period defts. discovered that pltf. had for many years previously been engaged in speculating in differences upon the Stock Exchange to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of pounds, & they thereupon dismissed him from their service:—Held: the dismissal of pltf. was justifiable.

The rule of law is, that where a person has entered into the position of servant, if he does anything incompatible with the due or faithful discharge of his duty to his master, the latter has a right to dismiss him. . . . But if a servant is guilty of such a crime outside his service as to make, & unsafe for a master to keep him in his employ, the servant may be dismissed by his master; & if the servant's conduct is so grossly immoral that all reasonable men would say that he cannot be trusted, the master may dismiss him (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—PEARCE v. FOSTER (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 536; 55 L. J. Q. B. 306; 54 L. T. 664; 51 J. P. 213; 34 W. R. 602; 2 T. L. R. 534, C. A.

508. ——.]—A servant can only be dismissed without notice on account of misconduct so serious as to be inconsistent with the continuance of the relationship of master & servant.—PROCTER v. BACON (1886), 2 T. L. R. 845.

509. ——.]—(1) There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal from service.

(2) It is a question for the jury whether the degree of misconduct was inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service, so as to justify dismissal.

The judge should not submit any issue to them if, in his opinion, no evidence of justification has been given. If he submits the issue he should direct, guide & assist them; direct, by informing them of the nature of the acts which as a matter of law would justify dismissal; guide, by calling their attention to the material facts; assist, in a manner & to an extent which there is no reason to define.

In an action for wrongful dismissal where a plea of justification was substantially set up:—Held: the judge was right in submitting the issues of fact to the jury; the verdict for pltf. was so unsatisfactory it ought not to be maintained.

(3) Certainly when the alleged misconduct consists of drunkenness there must be considerable difficulty in determining the extent or conditions of intoxication which will establish a justification for dismissal. The intoxication may be habitual & gross, & directly interfere with the business of the employer or with the ability of the servant to render due service. But it may be an isolated act committed under circumstances of festivity & in no way connected with or affecting the employer's business. In such a case the question whether the misconduct proved establishes the right to dismiss the servant must depend upon facts—& is a question of fact (LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD).—CLOUSTON & CO., LTD. v. CORRY, [1906] A. C. 122; 75 L. J. P. C. 20; 93 L. T. 706; 54 W. R. 382; 22 T. L. R. 107, P. C.

510. What amounts to—Entering protest on minute book—Clerk in employment of company.]—(1) A servant, discharged for improper conduct, cannot recover any part of the salary current from the last pay day at the time of his dismissal. A master, who has dismissed a servant, may justify the dismissal by showing that at the time of the dismissal he knew the servant to have committed an act which justified it: & a jury ought not to be asked whether the master was induced to dismiss him by that act or by some other cause. A clerk employed by a co. to enter proceedings in their minute book, entered on the margin of the minute book a protest in his own name against a summons for appointing a successor to himself:—Held: a jury were justified in finding this to be a sufficient cause of dismissal.

The master is justified in dismissing him for misconduct, & in that case he cannot recover pro rata. The act of entering the protest on the minute book was inconsistent with his service (COLERIDGE, J.).

I think the justification would be good, even if the fact, existing at the time, were not known to the master. . . . I think the existence of the justification sufficient whether that was or was not the motive of the dismissal (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).

526. Fraud.] — To a count in assumpsit for the breach of an agreement to continue pltf. in the employ of defts., members of a co., as an accountant, defts. pleaded, that pltf. received moneys of the co. for which he neglected to account, that he made wrongful & improper payments on account of the co., that he made false, fraudulent, & improper entries in the books & accounts, & rendered false, fraudulent, & fabricated accounts of pretended payments, that he made false, fraudulent, & fictitious representations of things done by him as accountant, that he refused to obey the commands of defts., that his accounts were so incorrectly, unskilfully, & improperly kept as to be utterly valueless to defts., & that he was unfit & incompetent to perform the duties of an accountant. Pltf. replied de injuria. At the trial defts. proved that pltf. had made false entries in the books & accounts of the co., & had concurred with certain of the directors in making false representations as to the state of the co.'s affairs; wherefore defts. discharged pltf. from their service:—Held: (1) the several allegations of misconduct in the plea being distinct & independent, defts., on proof of enough to justify their putting an end to the contract, were entitled to the verdict; (2) the fact of their having, at the time of dismissing the plaintiff, assigned a totally different reason for so doing, did not preclude defts. from setting up the alleged acts of misconduct as a defence at the trial.—BAILLIE v. KELL (1838), 4 Bing. Replication, de injuria. At the trial, it was proved that pltf. had misappropriated defts.' moneys, but the fact of such misappropriation was not known to the defts. until after they had discharged pltf.:—Held: defts. having justifiable cause for discharging pltf., the judge was wrong in leaving it to the jury to say whether they discharged him for that cause, for that their motive & intention was not in issue under the replication de injuria.—SPOTSWOOD v. BARROW (1850), 5 Exch. 110; 19 L. 539. Imputation of immoral relations with master—Though false to knowledge of master.]—In an action for words, imputing to pltf., a governess, that she had had a child by her master, the declaration alleged, as special damage, that her master had dismissed her from his employment. The words were spoken by deft. to pltf.'s father, at a time when pltf. was visiting her father, & were repeated by the father to the master, who then declined to receive pltf. again, though he knew the charge to be false, on the ground that it might be injurious to her character to do so, & would be unpleasant to both of them.

It is said the words could not have occasioned the dismissal, because L. knew they were not true, & a dismissal by him on that account would have been illegal. . . . It was perfectly reasonable & proper that the master should refuse to keep pltf. in his service after such a statement had been made, although he knew it to be untrue (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—GILLETT v. BULLIVANT (1840), 7 L. But if the pupil & assistant by employing the shop boy to compound the medicines, occasion real danger to the surgeon's practice, this would justify the surgeon in dismissing him.

In assumpsit for wrongfully dismissing a pupil & assistant to a surgeon, deft. pleaded that the pupil & assistant so misconducted himself as to make it necessary to dismiss him to prevent his ruining deft.'s practice, & pltf. replied de injuria:—Held: on these pleadings pltf. was entitled to begin.—WISE v. WILSON (1845), 1 Car. & Kir. 662, N. Failure in faithful service—Question of fact.]—It is not every failure in faithful service which will warrant a master in discharging his servant, & if he does, he must discharge him on the occasion of his misconduct & not at any time after, at the master's option. . . . It was a proper question to leave the jury to say whether deft. was justified in dismissing pltf. (BRAMWELL, B.).

It appears to me that the conduct of pltf. . . . was good ground for dismissal, at least it raised a question for the jury & not one of law for the ct. (POLLOCK, C.B.).—HORTON v. MCMURTRY (1860), 5 H. & N. 667 ; 29 L. J. Ex. 260 ; 2 L. T. 297 ; 8 W. R. 528 ; 157 E. R. 1347.

560. Irregularity in attendance.]—In an action for a wrongful dismissal from an employment, the dismissal being justified ; it is for the jury not only whether matter of fact existed which would be valid grounds of dismissal ; but whether the dismissal were bonâ fide & really on such grounds.

Rudeness is an uncertain term, & persons may differ as to what is rudeness. It was proper to state the expressions which were used. . . . With respect to the time or hours of attendance, or the degree of personal attention in the factory, it is for you [the jury] to say whether the hours of pltf.'s attendance were the ordinary & proper hours in a business of this nature, or whether the degree of personal attention which the nature of the business required. Deft. . . . at the time did not profess himself dissatisfied, but, on the contrary, appeared to be satisfied, & if he were not so, & thought that he had reason to complain, or that the business was really being injured for want of sufficient attention, he ought, at the time, to have said so, & openly complained of it, & so have given pltf. fair warning, instead of contenting himself with the keeping a secret record of the hours of pltf.'s attendance (COCKBURN, C.J.).—SMITH v. ALLEN (1862), 3 F. & F. 157, N. 563. Forgetfulness — Whether single instance sufficient—When causing damage.]—A single instance of forgetfulness by a servant, by reason of which damage is caused to a valuable machine of which he has the care & management, may constitute such neglect of duty as to justify his master in dismissing him without notice.

Neglect as often arises from forgetfulness as from anything else; & if the forgetfulness is with respect to an important thing it may well, in my view, be good ground for dismissal of the servant without notice. I do not say that it would be a good ground for dismissal in every case. Some trivial acts of forgetfulness might not even justify a complaint or remark; but to forget to do a thing which, if not done, may cause considerable damage to the master, or to his property, or to fellow servants, may be a serious neglect of duty (DARLING, J.).

As to whether a single act would justify dismissal, that depends upon the character of the act & the duties of the man who does it. . . . In 1901 the trustee dismissed pltf. from his position as manager, & pltf. then commenced an action claiming a declaration that he was entitled under the deed to be engaged as manager. Defendant, before delivering a defence, moved for an injunction until the trial to restrain pltf. & his family from remaining in the hotel, & from interfering with the conduct of the business:—Held: deft. had power to dismiss pltf., & the latter & his family had no right to remain in the hotel; & the injunction asked for was properly granted.—COLLISON v. WARREN, [1901] 1 Ch. 812; 70 L. The pltfs. left because deft. refused to pay $30, less than the amount then due: Held: pltfs. were not justified

There are reciprocal duties between master & servants. From the servant, is due obedience & respect; from the master, protection & good treatment. Desertion is a forfeiture of wages; but if the captain conducts himself in such a way as puts the toiler in that situation; that he cannot without damage to his personal safety continue in his service, human nature speaks the language—a servant is justified in providing for that safety (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—LIMLAND v. STEPHENS (1801), 3 Esp. 269, N. After he had been working a fortnight he was injured by a passing train. The jury found that defts. in not adopting any precautions for the protection of pltf. had been guilty of negligence:—Held: pltf. having continued in his employment with full knowledge, could not make defts. liable for any injury arising from danger to which he voluntarily exposed himself.

If pltf. had been misled in supposing that precautionary measures such as the dangerous nature of the service rendered reasonably necessary would be taken, he had a right to throw up his engagement & to decline to go on with the work (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WOODLEY v. METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RY. He subsequently sailed for Rio with the ship. She was destined, as it appeared from her charterparty, for the service of the Peruvian Govt., & had on board a cargo of coal & ammunition. In the course of her voyage to Rio she joined company with two Peruvian war steamers, to which from time to time she supplied coal & ammunition. At Rio it became known to pltf. & deft. that hostilities had commenced between Spain & Peru, two powers at peace with England. Deft., notwithstanding this circumstance, announced to pltf. that he intended to go on to Callao, in the Pacific, another Peruvian port. He was at that time acting under the direction of a Peruvian agent on board the ship, who received his instructions from the commanders of the two war steamers. Pltf. objected to serve any further on the voyage on the ground that it had become illegal, & involved greater danger than he had anticipated when he entered into his agreement with deft. He accordingly left the ship. In an action for breach of contract brought by him against deft.:—Held: deft. must be taken to have engaged pltf. for an ordinary voyage, & pltf. was entitled to treat as a breach of contract deft.'s employment of him on a voyage which would expose him to greater danger than he originally had reason to anticipate.—BURTON v. PINKERTON (1867), L. at which deft. was present, there was a written resolution, that S. should be employed to make a valuation of the land & houses on the intended line. S. would not act, & G., another member of the committee, applied to pltf. & at a subsequent meeting deft. assented to pltf.'s appointment. The fact having been communicated by G. to pltf., he acted upon it, & sent in his report. Deft. was afterwards a party to an agreement entered into to refer pltf.'s bill to G., & another person, for settlement:—Held: the jury were properly directed that the question was, whether pltf. & deft. meant to contract on the footing of a personal liability of deft., either alone or as a member of the acting committee, or on the credit of the funds.

If [a party] does work on the order of another, under such circumstances as that it must be presumed, that he looks to be paid as a matter of right by him, then a contract would be implied with that person—under most circumstances, an absolute one, under some a conditional one—provided he receives funds wherewith to pay (PARKE, B.).—HIGGINS v. HOPKINS (1848), 3 Exch. 163; 6 Ry. & Can. 612. —— —— Presumption of contract on ordinary terms — Rebuttal of presumption.]—Pltf. wrote to deft. as follows:—"I agree to accept the appointment of secretary of the L. co. upon the following terms, viz., first, a salary of £300 per annum, commencing at the present date, if the co. be completely registered & put into operation; if not, I shall be satisfied with any remuneration for my time & labour you may think me deserving of & your means can afford." Deft. wrote in answer accepting the terms, & adding:—"It is distinctly agreed & understood that if the co. is not formed & carried out, that part of your letter which alludes to your salary be null & void, & that at the expiration of three months it is entirely left to me to give unto you such sum of money as I may deem right as compensation for labour done in the event of the co. not being carried out." Pltf. rendered some service, but the co. was never formed:—Held: there was no contract upon which pltf. could recover any part of the salary.

It is by no means a matter of law that a person shall be paid for his services, it is a matter of contract. No doubt there is a variety of labour from which there arises an irresistible inference that the person who has done it is to be paid, but that is a sort of labour which is always done for money, & in such cases a jury would presume a contract on the ordinary terms unless evidence was given to the contrary (MARTIN, B.).—ROBERTS v. SMITH (1859), 4 H. & N. 315; 28 L. 614. —— Resolution to grant holiday with wages—Right to additional wages if no holiday allowed.]—The council of a corpn. passed a resolution "that all the workmen in the employ of the corpn. with not less than twelve months' service shall have one week's holiday in each year between the beginning of Apr. & the end of Oct. with pay: this arrangement to come into operation in the year 1907."

A workman who came within the terms of this resolution served from July 2, 1914, to Aug. 5, 1915, without having had the holiday. He was dismissed the service by a notice which expired on Aug. 5, 1915, but was not paid a week's wages, in lieu of the holiday:—Held: assuming the resolution contained the terms of the contract, it did not mean that the workman was entitled to a week's wages for each completed year of service if he was not allowed a week's holiday at some time between Apr. & Oct., & therefore he was not entitled to the week's pay claimed by him.—HURT v. SHEFFIELD CORPN. D. During Absence of Servant.

(a) In General.

624. Imprisonment by foreign power.] — A foreign prince, under pretence of precaution against a supposed act of aggression of our Govt., made a hostile seizure of British ships in his ports, & imprisoned our seamen on shore, & after six months they were released, & they resumed & concluded their voyage, & the owners received their freight:—Held: such seizure, however hostile in the manner, so far partook of the nature of an embargo in its result, & not of a capture, that it did not put an end to the contract of a mariner for wages even during the time of such detention & imprisonment. But even considering it as a temporary capture, yet, like the case of a capture & recapture, the mariner was still entitled to his wages; for a mariner's title to wages depends on the ship's earning her freight for the voyage, & the performance of his stipulated duty; & here freight for the voyage was ultimately earned, & the mariner was guilty of no breach of duty; for his stipulation not to be on shore under any pretence, without leave, before the voyage was ended, must be understood of a being on shore by the party's own unauthorised act; & even if such imprisonment on shore could be so considered, yet the master having afterwards received him again on board without objection amounted to a dispensation of the service in the interval, & entitled him to wages according to his original contract.—BEALE v. THOMPSON (1804), 4 East, 546; 1 Smith, K. b. While attending court under subpœna.]—The temporary absence of committee would take into consideration the payment of salary after the expiration of the four weeks.

A married woman, head mistress of an infant school, expected her confinement early in Jan. 1911. On Sept. 10, 1910, the committee, in view of her condition, requested her to absent herself from her duties till after the birth of the child. They regarded her condition as an illness & declined to pay her full salary during her absence which extended from Sept. 10, 1910, to Feb. 6, 1911 :—Held : the teacher's absence from Sept. to Feb. was not "absence through illness," although this expression was not confined to absence during the time of actual illness, but absence during approaching illness & subsequent convalescence, but in consequence of the request of the committee ; & she was entitled to her full salary.

The law seems to be that loss arising from the temporary incapacity of a servant from illness falls upon the employer. The basis of that is that illness is not a breach of contract but something arising from the act of God (per CUR.).—DAVIES v. EBBW VALE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1911), 75 J. P. 533 ; 27 T. L. R. 543 ; 9 L. G. R. 1226.

627. Wartime service with forces—Contract to pay during absence—Servant of corporation.]—On Sept. 21, 1914, the corpn. of C. passed a resolution "that any officer or servant of the corpn. . . . who may volunteer & be accepted as such, & serve Great Britain afloat or ashore during this European War be allowed leave of absence during his naval or military services ; that he be reinstated upon his return with no loss of position or emoluments consequent upon his enforced absence ; that the corpn. pay him . . . during such period such sums as with the pay he receives from the Govt. will make up his full salary or wages. . . ."

Pltf. was employed by defts. as a tramcar driver at £1 11*s.* 6*d.* a week. Relying on the resolution of Sept. 1914, on July 6, 1915, he volunteered, contrary to the wishes of his employers, & was accepted for service. He claimed from defts. the difference between his army pay & the civil pay he was receiving before he enlisted :—Held : (1) by the resolution of Sept. 21, defts. had consented to pltf. enlisting ; (2) they had contracted to pay pltf. the sum claimed in the action ; (3) the contract, if ultra vires originally, was validated by Local Government (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1916 (c. 12), which was retrospective. Pltf. was therefore entitled to judgment.—SHIPTON v. CARDIFF CORPN. (1917), 87 L. J. K. B. 51 ; 116 L. T. 687 ; 15 L. G. R. 587.

628. —— —— —— War bonus included.]—On Sept. 15, 1914, the council of the deft. corpn. passed a resolution that the whole of their council employees, married or single, called up for service or volunteering for service with the Forces should be granted "full civil pay," less their service pay, calculated at 7*s.* per week, & in the case of married men in the army, less also the amount of the separation allowance for the wife, as from the date of mobilisation or enlistment, the council's payments to be continued so long as the employees were required to remain in the Forces & were in receipt of naval or military pay : & that increments of salary under any scale becoming due to any officer or employee during his period of service with the forces of the Crown should be paid as they accrued. Pltf., who was employed by the council as a riveter & driller, in reliance on that resolution volunteered for service with the Forces & enlisted on Nov. 11, 1914. He was at that time a married man & was in receipt of a weekly wage of £1 11*s.* 3*d.* Defts. had in fact no power to make the payments authorised by the resolution, but on May 17, 1916, Local Government (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1916 (c. 12), s. 1, came into force. As from the date of pltf.'s enlistment & down to the time of his demobilisation defts. paid to pltf. weekly sums which from time to time varied in amount, & which were calculated upon the assumption that, according to the contract between the parties, the "full civil pay" of pltf. was the pay he was receiving at the date of his enlistment. In an action brought by pltf. to recover the increments of pay to which he would have been entitled if he had remained in the service of defts. :—Held : the action was founded upon a simple contract debt & not upon a specialty debt arising out of Local Government (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1916 (c. 12), & therefore Stat. Limitations, & not Civil Procedure Act, 1833, applied ; therefore, pltf. could only recover such increments of pay as became payable within the six years preceding the issue of the writ in the action.—AYLOTT v. WEST HAM CORPN., [1927] 1 Ch. 30 ; 95 L. A telegraphist relying on the circular left his position in the Post Office for military service, & during his absence bonuses were given to the postal staff remaining at home, & he by petition of right claimed the amount of those bonuses :—Held : the bonuses were part of suppliant's pay, & he was entitled to the relief claimed.—SUTTON v. A.-G. 630. —— —— —— ——.]—On Aug. 21, 1924, the Railway Clearing House issued a circular in which it was stated that if a married man with dependants joined the Army, an allowance would be made to him which, with the amount deducted from his pay & separation allowance by the Army authorities, would not be less than four-fifths of his salary or standard rate of pay when he was in the service of the Clearing House. An unmarried man or widower with dependants was to receive an allowance according to individual circumstances. It was also stated that the men's posts were, as far as possible, to be kept open for them till their return to civil life. Pltfs., who had joined the Army, claimed a declaration that they were entitled under the circular in question to the difference between the emoluments paid to them during their service in His Majesty's Forces & the emoluments paid to other persons employed by the Clearing House during the same period who did not join the Forces. Pltfs. were selected from three classes : (a) those who had already enlisted when the circular was issued ; (b) those who enlisted between the date of the issue of the circular in question & June 25, 1916, when the Military Service Act, 1916 (c. 105), came into force ; &

By the terms of his appointment it was stipulated that he should devote all his services to the business of the comrs. 646. —— Payment of income tax by employer—Promotion to higher class of employment accepted.]—Under Port of London Act, 1908 (c. 68), s. 60, servants of certain dock cos. which by that Act were transferred to the Port Authority held their office upon like "terms & conditions" as under the transferred dock cos. Pltfs., who were transferred employees, had entered the service at a time when there was a trade usage by the dock cos. to pay the income tax upon the salaries of such of their servants as were assessable thereto. At that time, having regard to the amount of their salaries, pltfs. were not so assessable. After the transfer, the Port Authority gave notice to discontinue the practice of paying income tax upon salaries. Pltfs were subsequently promoted by the Port Authority to higher grades of employment at increased salaries, & upon the passing of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 30), they became assessable to income tax on the excess of their salaries over £120. They claimed a declaration that the Port Authority were liable to pay the tax:—Held: the acceptance by pltfs. of promotion to a higher class of employment, with notice of defts.' intention to discontinue the practice of paying income tax upon salaries, constituted a fresh contract of service, under which there was no obligation upon defts. to pay the tax.—MEEK v. PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY, [1918] 2 Ch. 96; 87 L. 647. Rescission of agreement—On transfer of business to statutory company.]—Pltf. had since 1892 been in the employment of the East London Waterworks co. That undertaking was by Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (c. 41), transferred to defts., the Metropolitan Water Board, & June 24, 1904, was the "appointed day" under the Act on which his transfer as one of the existing officers or servants of the East London Waterworks co. to defts. took place. By verbal agreement in 1899 that co. had arranged to pay pltf., in addition to his weekly wages, an extra sum for certain extra services performed by him. From June 24, 1902, to Nov. 16, 1906, no change was made by defts. as regards this extra weekly payment, but they then gave him notice that they would not in future pay this addition to his regular wages. Pltf. sued defts. for balance of wages from Nov. 17, 1906, & claimed a declaration that the agreement of 1899 was subsisting & binding on defts.:—Held: pltf.'s claim failed upon the ground that Metropolis Water Act, 1902, gave him no legal right to insist that his pay could never be altered so long as he was performing the same duties as he had previously performed. There was nothing in the words of sect. 47 which prevented defts., after an officer or servant had once been taken over by them from considering his rate of pay too high & consequently altering it. As the East London Waterworks co. had been entitled, at any time to give seven days' notice to change pltf.'s conditions of service & pay, defts. were equally entitled to do so. Pltf. had sustained no loss in consequence of the Act, & it was only if loss were sustained in consequence of the Act that any right to recover compensation arose under sect. 47.—ROWSELL v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD (1915), 84 L. 652. —— Salary at weekly rate—Attachment of salary before expiry of week.]—S., a music hall artiste, was indebted to M. in the sum of £31 18*s.* 4*d.* for which amount & costs judgment was obtained against him. For the week beginning May 15, S. was engaged to give a week's performance at L. at a salary of £180 per week. On May 17 a garnishee order nisi was obtained by M. against S.'s employers to attach the proportion of salary alleged to be due to S. for the performances already given by him that week, the affidavit upon which the application was based stating that the garnishees were indebted to S. in the sum of £100 or thereabouts. By the terms of S.'s agreement his engagement was expressed to be for one week commencing May 15 at a salary of £180 per week. Clause 8 provided that " In case the artiste shall, except through illness . . . or accident, . . . fail to perform at any performance the artiste shall pay to the management as & for liquidated damages a sum equal to the sum which the artiste would have received for such performance in addition to costs incurred by the management through the default of the artiste. . . ." Clause 12 provided that " No salary shall be paid for days upon which the theatre is closed by reason of national mourning. . . ." " No salary shall be payable for any performance at which the artiste may not appear through illness or his own default. . . ." Clause 16 provided (inter alia): " If the artiste shall commit any breach of any of the terms & conditions of this contract or of the rules, the management . . . may forthwith determine this contract, & the artiste shall have no claim upon them for salary (other than a proportion for performances played) expenses, costs, or otherwise."

In an issue directed by the master it was contended on behalf of the garnishees that upon the construction of the contract the salary payable to S. did not become due until the expiration of the week for which he was engaged, & consequently was not liable to attachment before that time. It was contended for the judgment creditor that clauses, 8, 12 & 16 of the agreement showed that, although the salary was payable weekly, it was contemplated that the artiste should be taken to have earned his salary at the end of each performance. The master made the garnishee order absolute:—Held: the decision of the master was wrong, & there was no debt due to S. which was liable to attachment until the expiration of his Plea, that the claim was for wages due for services performed by pltf. as master of a boat used by defts. for the carriage of goods, they being common carriers, & that pltf. was hired by them under an agreement, that, as master of the said boat, he was to be responsible for the safety & due delivery of all goods taken on board by him, & was to be chargeable for all pilferages of, or damage or losses to any goods under his charge; & that the amount thereof should be deducted from his wages, & might be pleaded or set off accordingly. The plea then averred the delivery of a pipe of wine to pltf. on board the boat; & that, whilst it was so in pltf.'s charge, the wine was pilfered & water substituted in lieu thereof, whereby the pipe of wine was greatly damaged, for which damage defts. were liable, & which damages amounted to a certain sum, etc., which far exceeded the amount of the causes of action in the declaration mentioned. SUB-SECT. 5.—FORFEITURE.

A. Absence of Servant without Due Notice.

663. Right of servant to recover—Where wages accrued due at time of breach.]—GUY v. NICHOLS (1694), Comb. 265 ; 90 E. R. 468.

664. —— ——.]—Deft. having contracted with the Lords of the Admiralty to provide a steam vessel for exploring the river N., wrote to pltf. as follows : "I am willing to give you the command of the steamer destined for an exploring & trading voyage up the river N. & its tributaries. Your pay to be at the rate of £50 per month commencing from Dec. 1, 1853, & a commission of 20 per cent. on the net proceeds of the produce you may bring down." In reply, pltf. wrote to deft. as follows : "In answer to your letter of yesterday offering me the command of the vessel to go out in a trading & exploring voyage to the river N. & its tributaries at a fixed pay of £50 per month & 20 per cent. on the net proceeds of the goods obtained, I beg leave to say that I accept the service & the terms you mention." The vessel proceeded up the N. under the command of pltf. as far as D. when pltf. refused to proceed further & abandoned the command :—Held : this was not an entire contract for the whole voyage, but a contract which gave a cause of action for the salary as each month arose, & which, when once vested, was not subject to be lost or divested by pltf.'s desertion or abandonment of the contract.—TAYLOR v. LAIRD (1856), 1 H. & N. 266 ; 25 L. 665. —— ——.]—Pltf. shipped on board deft.'s vessel, as mate, at wages of £5 10*s.* per calendar month, under articles in the form sanctioned by the Board of Trade in pursuance of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, for a voyage from Shields to Alexandria, &, if required, to any port or ports in the Mediterranean, Black Sea, Danube, etc., & home to the ship's final port of discharge in the United Kingdom or continent of Europe ; the voyage not expected to exceed twelve months. During the voyage out there was evidence that pltf. had been guilty of drunkenness & violent & insubordinate conduct ; &, being on shore at Sulina, a port in the Danube, he was left behind, & the vessel came home without him. In an action for wages for the time pltf. actually served on board, the jury found that he had been guilty of drunkenness & abusive language subversive of discipline, & that he was not left behind by the wilful misconduct or negligence of the captain, but through his own negligence & misconduct. They, however, negatived desertion :—Held : notwithstanding this finding of the jury, pltf. was entitled to recover wages up to the time of his being left behind at Sulina, the contract being for a succession of voyages of indefinite duration, though "not expected to exceed twelve months," & the wages being vested & a debt at the end of each month of service, subject, it might be, to forfeiture in an event which had not happened, though perhaps no recoverable until the expiration of the period of service stipulated for.—BUTTON v. THOMPSON (1869), L. 667. —— ——.]—Pltf. was a putter in the service of a colliery co., his duty being to draw coal in tubs underground. His wages depended on the number of tubs drawn, & were payable fortnightly on the Friday following the end of each fortnight, a statement of the wages due, called a pay note, being handed to each workman on the proceding day. The total amount of work done each day was ascertained daily. On Thursday, July 12, 1906, pay notes were handed to the putters showing the wages due for the fortnight ending on July 7. A dispute arose as to the amount due to one of the putters, & in consequence on the Friday the putters declined to work, thus laying the pit idle. The putters were then informed that they had broken their contracts & forfeited all wages since the conclusion of the previous fortnight. On the following Monday the putters presented themselves for work but were refused unless they signed on afresh. By arrangement, however, they resumed work on the next day. Pltf. claimed for four days' wages from July 9 to July 12 inclusive, & damages for breach of contract in not allowing him to work on the Monday contending upon the latter point that laying the pit idle for a day or two was, to the knowledge of defts., common practice, & did not amount to a repudiation of the contract of service. The county ct. judge found that the wages became due each day as they were earned, & he gave judgment for pltf. for the wages claimed & damages. The Div. Ct. held pltf. was entitled to the wages, but not to the damages, as the refusal of the men to work justified their dismissal. Upon appeal by defts. upon the question of wages:—Held: as each day's wages became due daily, pltf. was entitled to recover.—PARKIN v. SOUTH HETTON COAL CO. (1907), 98 L. T. 162; 24 T. L. C. Agreement for Forfeiture.

686. Construction of agreement — Forfeiture must come within terms.] — Pltf. declared in assumpsit for commission & wages due to him on a contract, whereby he agreed with defts. to sail for them to B., & purchase for them 1,200 tons of palm oil, & ship it on board of their ships; that he would faithfully abide by their instructions to him, & would not aid or assist, directly or indirectly, the trading of any other ships or cargoes, by giving advice for the purpose of selling or bartering the same for palm oil, except so far as it might be rendered necessary for carrying the agreement into effect, & for defts.' benefit, under the penalty of the forfeiture of his commission & wages. Defts. pleaded, that they were merchants trading to the coast of Africa, & having trading establishments there; & they were desirous of sending out an agent there, to purchase & ship for them palm oil, & to conduct exclusively their trading & take charge of their property there, which pltf. & one H. & one A. well knew; & that pltf. & those persons, contriving to defraud defts., fraudulently conspired & agreed together that H. & A. should fit out two ships for the coast of Africa, & that pltf. should apply for & obtain the employment as agent for defts., & under colour & by means of such employment, & without defts.' knowledge, & in fraud of his agreement with them, should assist & advise the said H. & A. in the trading of their ships, & the selling & bartering the cargoes for palm oil, & should assist the said ships by employing the workmen & servants of defts. upon them, & endeavour to establish a trade for the said H. & A. in competition with & to the prejudice of defts.; that, in pursuance of such conspiracy, they fitted out ships, & pltf. obtained the employment as agent, & induced defts. to enter into the agreement in the declaration mentioned, for the purposes before stated; & that he did, under colour of his employment, & without defts.' knowledge, & in fraud of his agreement, aid & assist H. & A. in the trading of their ships, & supplied them with palm oil, by employing defts.' workmen & servants upon them, & in other ways assisted them in the bartering their cargoes for palm oil, & in establishing a rival trade to defts. Replication de injuriâ:—Held: the plea was bad; for the purposes therein stated, could not vitiate the agreement itself when carried into effect; & the actual aiding & assisting of H. & A., which was charged against pltf., was not such as was specified in the agreement.—HEMINGWAY v. HAMILTON (1838), 4 M. & W. 115; 150 E. 687. —— Absence without leave — Continuing absence with leave.]—By one of the rules of a cotton mill, any person absenting himself on account of sickness or any other cause was immediately to give notice to the overlooker; in default thereof all wages then earned were to be forfeited. A weaver in the mill, in the middle of the day, asked the overlooker for leave of absence for half a day, promising to return to work the next morning at six. The weaver did not return the next day till half-past one in the afternoon:—Held: the weaver did not forfeit her wages under this rule, for she could not be said to be absent without notice merely by continuing her absence longer than the period which she had mentioned.—TAYLOR v. CARR & PORTER (1861), 30 L. After breakfast he came again, & went in unobserved, till, on being noticed by the overlooker, he was told his work had been distributed, & T. went away again. On suing for the week's wages:—Held: the county ct. judge was wrong in finding that T. had not absented himself on these facts, & therefore T. could not recover his wages.—TOMLINSON v. ASHWORTH (1885), 50 J. Pltf., having been dismissed by the manager for a breach of the rules, brought an action to recover the wages due to him. After the action was brought the manager, without hearing anything that pltf. might wish to say, signed a certificate which declared the wages then due to pltf. to be forfeited to the co. :—Held : the certificate was no defence to the action, as the manager had not given pltf. an opportunity of being heard on the question of forfeiture.—ARMSTRONG v. SOUTH LONDON TRAMWAYS CO., LTD. 691. Effect of agreement —On liability of servant to criminal proceedings.]—R., a quarryman, was employed under a written agreement to serve D. for a certain period, the wages to be paid once every two months, & in case of absence without leave of D., then R. to forfeit the wages in hand then due to him. R., during the period, absented himself, whereupon D. proceeded against him under 4 Geo. 4, c. 34 :—Held : though the contract of hiring reserved to the master a remedy, such as forfeiture of the servant's wages, in case of the servant's absence without cause, the servant was not the less liable to the criminal punishment.—DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. RAWLINSON (1864), 28 J. P. 72.

692. What amount forfeited—All wages accrued due—Wages for past period of hiring.]—In an action to recover 22*s.* for wages it appeared that pltf. was a weaver in the employment of defts., who were cotton manufacturers, that he was a weekly servant, & that his wages were regulated by the number of pieces which from time to time he wove & delivered to his masters. The practice at defts.' mill was that the wages earned by the workmen at the mill were ascertained & fixed at noon on Thursday, but were not paid to the workmen till the following Saturday. The workmen worked under rules embodied in the contract of hiring, as follows : " All persons in our employ are required to give fourteen days' notice before leaving, such notice to be given at the time of booking up. Persons leaving without notice will forfeit all wages due." The term " booking up " is understood to mean the Thursday in each week. Fifteen shillings of the amount sued for was earned by pltf. in the week of his service, which ended at noon on Thursday, & the amount was then fixed. He worked till the forenoon of Friday, earning the balance claimed, & then left his service without any reasonable excuse :—Held : the wages earned in the week ending on Thursday were forfeited as the rules were so framed as to protect the master by making the workman always liable to forfeit something if he left without notice. —WALSH v. WALLEY (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 367 ; 43 L. J. Q. B. 102 ; 38 J. P. 470 ; sub nom. WALLEY v. WALSH, 22 W. R. 571.

693. —— —— ——.]—A weaver, a woman subject to the provisions of the Factory Acts, was employed at a mill in which amongst the rules were rule 15, that no person shall leave his or her work without giving fourteen days' previous notice, such notice to be given on a Saturday, & rule 16, that any person leaving without giving such notice "shall forfeit all wages then due, or earned, or unpaid." She was paid by the piece & all work done was booked up at 3 p.m. on Wednesday in each week, & paid for on the following Saturday, all work booked after 3 p.m. on Wednesday being carried forward to the following week. She left the mill before 3 p.m. on a Wednesday without giving the required notice, having previously carried in & had booked certain work which she had completed. On the following Saturday she applied for the wages due at the time she left & when she had completed her work, but payment was refused on the ground that the same was forfeited by rules 15 & 16. No claim was, however, made for damage sustained by the employer. . . . Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 11, enacts that "in the case of a child, young person, or woman, subject to the provisions of the Factory Acts, any forfeiture on the ground of absence or leaving work shall not be deducted from or set off against a claim for wages or other sum due for work done before such absence or leaving work, except to the amount of the damage, if any, which the employer may have sustained by reason of such absence or leaving work" : —Held : the above facts did not show a weekly hiring at weekly wages, but showed that the price for the work done & booked when the weaver left on the Wednesday was then earned & due though not then payable, & the same would have been forfeited by rules 15 & 16 but as there was no damage & the weaver was a woman subject to the Factory Acts she was protected by Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 11, & could not be deprived of what she had so earned.

If the hiring was a weekly hiring for weekly wages, then as no wages would be due until the end of the week, if applt. left before the end of the week, I am clearly of the opinion that this would not be within Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 11, but would be a case in which applt. was claiming for a sum which was never due at all. . . . Suppose the operative, instead of being a woman had been a workman . . . then the rules being part of the contract, although he would have earned the price to be paid for his work, & would have been forfeited by rules 15 & 16 (BRETT, L.J.). —WARBURTON v. HEYWORTH (1880), 6 Q. 694. —— Wages during suspension of servant—Suspension followed by dismissal.]—By a rule of a co. the co. reserved the right to punish any servant, by immediate dismissal, fine, or suspension from duty, for certain offences, & they also reserved the right to deduct from the pay of their servants, & retain, the sums which might be imposed as fines, & to withhold their wages during the time of their suspension or absence from duty for any cause. The co. suspended one of their servants for two weeks under the rule, & at the expiration of the two weeks they dismissed him:—Held: he was entitled to his wages during the two weeks.—WARBURTON v. TAFF VALE RY. CO. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 420, D. C.

695. Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 11—Applicable only where wages accrued due.]—Pltf., a factory winder, was paid every Saturday for the number of sets she had wound off during the week ending on the preceding Wednesday; one of the rules of defts.' factory, in which she worked was that fourteen days' notice in writing was required previous to leaving their employment, such notice to be given on a Thursday; & all persons leaving without notice would forfeit the whole of the wages to which they would otherwise have been entitled, & also render themselves liable to be proceeded against according to law.

Pltf. earned 3*s.* 7*d.* on the first two days of one week of her employment, was absent with leave on the Saturday, did not return, & wholly left deft.'s service, without leave or notice, on Monday. In an action for 3*s.* 7*d.* earned, the county ct. judge held that pltf.'s was a weekly hiring, & that, although deft.'s damage by reason of pltf.'s absence was only 3*s.* pltf. could not recover anything under above sect.:—Held: notwithstanding the fortnight's notice required, the facts justified the finding that the service was weekly; pltf. had no claim for wages or other sum due for work done; & the county ct. judge was right.—GREGSON v. WATSON (1876), 34 L. Plea, that pltf. was hired on the terms that, if he should be drunk during service, he should forfeit all wages then due: that after the wages became due & whilst pltf. was in deft.'s service, he was drunk, whereby, etc. Replication, after pltf. was drunk, deft. exonerated him from the forfeiture, & agreed to pay him the wages already due as aforesaid, & continued to employ him as such servant. New assignment, that part of the wages accrued due before pltf. was drunk, & the rest afterwards; & that pltf. declared not only for wages due before but also for wages due after, etc.:—Held: the replication was bad for not showing any consideration for agreeing to pay the forfeited wages.—MONKMAN v. SHEPHERDSON (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 411; 3 Per. & Dav. 182; 9 L. Deft. usually paid pltf. his wages & made up all the accounts, entering pltf.'s moneys in the books as being settled weekly: deft. & D. settled monthly. Pltf. having, as he alleged, £38 due, applied to deft. for it, admitting he had retained of D.'s eleven journeys of forty miles road money & parcels: deft. sent him £20 on account, & promised to pay the balance on pltf.'s calling to adjust accounts.

703. — — Member of unincorporated association—After dissolution of association.]—Pltf. was the secretary of a shipowners' association, which was unincorporated, & was managed by a committee, which might be chosen from persons who were not members of the association. The rules provided that a certain entrance fee & annual subscription should be paid for each vessel; & that, if the funds of the association were not sufficient to meet its liabilities, the committee might make calls after a hundred vessels had been entered. Pltf. was appointed secretary by an agreement, under which he was to have a salary & commission; it contained a clause whereby he exonerated the managing committee from liability for his salary, etc., holding the association, subject to the rules & regulations, alone responsible. The association was dissolved. A hundred vessels were never entered. In an action brought against a member of the association for salary, commission, & disbursements :—Held : pltf. could not recover, as on the true construction of the agreement, he had agreed to look for payment to the funds of the association, & not to the individual members.—DE VRIES v. CORNER (1865), 13 L. 710. Interest on arrears of wages.]—Pltf., by a verbal agreement, in the year 1858, agreed to become the manager of deft.'s ironworks. By the terms of the agreement, pltf. was to receive 7½ per cent. of the profits made by deft., in each year, to be made up to £500 in case the proportion in question could not amount to that sum. Pltf. continued to act as manager to deft. until the year 1864, when the business was sold. In the years 1859 & 1861 the sums due to pltf. under the agreement exceeded the fixed sum of £500 by £440 2*s.* & £405 17*s.* 6*d.* respectively. No portion of these two sums of £440 2*s.* & £405 17*s.* 6*d.* was demanded by pltf., or paid by deft., until Sept. 13, 1864, when deft. paid pltf. the sum of £554, leaving £291 19*s.* 6*d.* still due. Deft. was not chargeable with any fraud, or anything beyond a certain inaccurracy in his accounts:—Held: (1) pltf. was not entitled to interest on the sums of £440 2*s.* & £405 17*s.* 6*d.* for the respective periods preceding Sept. 13, 1864; (2) pltf. was entitled to interest on the sum of £291 19*s.* 6*d.* from Sept. 13, 1864, to the date of the present order.—RISHTON v. GRISSELL (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 393; 18 W. R. 821.

711. Damages for delay in payment.]—Pltf., together with some other men, had been employed as a bricklayer by defts. He was working on night shift, & was given notice at 5 a.m. that his employment would end at 6 a.m. Upon the termination of his employment a sum of £5 4*s.* 8*d.* was due to pltf., & at 6 a.m. he went to the office of defts., to receive the amount to which he was entitled. There was no one there to pay him at the time & he was eventually kept waiting until 10.45 a.m. when he received his money. In these circumstances he brought an action against defts. claiming 3*s.* 11*d.* for loss of time owing to defts.' delay in paying the wages due to him. Evidence was given before the county ct. judge that it was usual to pay the workmen's wages at the expiration of the hour's notice given to them, so that there might be no delay in applying for another job. The county ct. judge gave judgment for pltf. for the amount claimed upon the ground that it was unreasonable to expect him to wait for some hours for his money after being dismissed at an hour's notice:—Held: the decision of the judge was wrong, & that upon the above facts no contract to pay pltf. for the time he was kept waiting for his wages could be implied.—HARPER v. LINTHORPE DINSDALE SMELTING CO., LTD. Board & lodging—Pauper placed with parishioner.]—A pauper placed by the parish with a parishioner, upon an agreement between the latter & the parish officers to find board, washing, & lodging for the pauper at 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, & that the pauper was to do what he was set about, does not constitute the relation of master & servant between such parishioner & the pauper so as to enable the latter to gain a settlement as by hiring & service. Neither does such relation arise by implication from a continuance of services by the pauper to the parishioner; living with him as before, after the parish had refused any longer to continue the parochial allowance: & the pauper, who was a Greenwich pensioner, going there twice a year without asking or receiving the leave of the parishioner: the latter, however, not refusing leave when informed of the other's going.—R. v. RICKINGHALL INFERIOR (INHABITANTS) (1806), 7 East, 373; 3 Smith, K. While prisoner was so residing, prosecutor's wife gave prisoner money to pay a coal bill, which money prisoner kept, & brought back a forged receipt to the coal bill:—Held: prisoner was not the servant of prosecutor, but this was a larceny of the money.—R. v. SMITH (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 423.

It was the duty of B., on each day when he drove, to tell the book-keeper at Malvern how much money he had taken; the book-keeper entering that sum in a book & on the way bill, together with what he had taken himself; & he then had to pay over the latter to B., who was to give the two sums to A. B. gave true accounts to the book-keeper, who made true entries, but B. accounted for smaller sums to A., saying that those were all, & paid over to A. these smaller sums. All the proprietors were interested in the money, but A. was the person to receive it, & he was accountable to his co-proprietors:—Held: this was embezzlement, & B. was rightly described in the indictment as the servant of A., & the money embezzled was properly laid as the money of A.—R. v. WHITE (1839), 8 C. & P. 742; 2 Mood. This action is founded in property. If pltf. was dismissed without reasonable cause, whereby he was prevented from becoming entitled to this suit of clothes, he has his action for that; but he cannot maintain an action of trover, because he has no property in the clothes till he has served a

(2) To an action for wrongfully dismissing pltf. from deft.'s service under the above agreement, deft. pleaded that he determined the service by a month's notice, according to the custom. Part VI.—Breach of Contract and Remedies Therefor.

SECT. 1.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO BREACH.

SUB-SECT. 1.—BY SERVANT.

729. Refusal to work—Dispute amongst workmen.]—At the hearing of a complaint under Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), by the proprietors of a coal mine against deft., one of their workmen, it appeared that the workmen were employed under contracts determinable on fourteen days' notice, & subject to certain regulations under which the employer might dismiss or suspend any workman for disobedience to orders, & the workmen, in descending or ascending the mine in the cages, were to obey the orders of the banksman. Part of the miners employed at the colliery, including deft., were members of a trade union. The unionists addressed a notice to complainants that, at the expiration of fourteen days, all non-unionists must descend & ascend the mine by themselves. On the morning of the day on which such notice expired, certain workmen, of whom deft. was one, were at the pit mouth for the purpose of going down by the cage then in readiness for them. The first to enter the cage was a non-unionist, whereupon the other men, who were unionists, refused to go down with him. The non-unionist then went down alone, &, upon the next cage coming up a few seconds afterwards, the unionists offered to go down; but the undermanager in charge refused to allow them to do so. This occurred on three successive days. The justices ordered deft. to pay substantial damages for wrongfully absenting himself from complainants' service, & dismissed a counterclaim by him against them for having wrongfully refused to allow him to follow his lawful employment:—Held: under the circumstances, there had been such a breach of contract on the part of deft. as entitled complainants to substantial, & not merely to nominal, damages, & the counterclaim could not be maintained.—BOWES & PARTNERS v. PRESS, [1894] 1 Q. B. 202; 63 L. J. Q. B. 165; 70 L. T. 116; 58 J. P. 280; 42 W. R. 340; 10 T. L. R. 55; 9 R. 302; sub nom. PRESS v. BOWES & PARTNERS, LTD., 38 Sol. Jo. 56, C. A.

730. —— Extra hours as authorised by contract of service.]—Applt. was employed by resps. as a collier upon terms which provided (inter alia) that the hours of labour should be such as are authorised by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), s. 1, which enacts that the period of work shall be limited to eight hours a day, & sect. 3, sub-sect. 1 of which enacts that the hours of work may be extended on not more than sixty days in a year, by not more than one hour a day, provided the owner, agent or manager takes the steps prescribed by the Act to secure such extension & that on any day on which such an extension of time is made in accordance with that sect. the time so extended shall be substituted for the purposes of the Act as respects that mine for the time as fixed by the Act. The manager put up notices stating that on certain days the hours of working would be extended from eight hours to nine. These notices complied with the provisions of the Act. Applt. refused to work the extra hour:—Held: applt.'s refusal was a breach of his contract of service.—ROBINSON v. INSOLES, LTD. (1909), 102 L. T. 45; 74 J. P. 47.

731. Failure to perform at entertainment.]—Declaration stated that deft. agreed that he & his wife should for three months perform as equestrians on the stage & in the ring in all entertainments which might be produced at A., or elsewhere, under the direction of pltf., in such parts as pltf. should require, & should attend all calls & rehearsals; that although pltf. had an establishment at P. under his direction, for equestrian entertainments, & although pltf. required deft. & his wife to join pltf.'s establishment at P. for the purpose of performing in entertainments to be produced there, & although a reasonable time for joining elapsed before the suit, yet deft. & his wife did not join or perform in the entertainments to be produced at P., etc. On demurrer, the declaration was held good, inasmuch as it sufficiently appeared that the requisition by pltf. was to appear & perform as equestrians on the stage or in the ring. Also that the breach was good, showing substantially an entire refusal to perform the contract.—BATTY v. MELILLO (1850), 10 C. B. 282; 1 L. M. & P. 571; 19 L. J. C. P. 362; 16 L. T. O. drawing-rooms in the United Kingdom during his engagement, to begin on Mar. 30, 1875, & terminate on July 13, 1875, at a salary of £150 per month; that pltf. should sing in concerts as well as operas, but should not sing anywhere out of the theatre in the United Kingdom from Jan. 1 to Dec. 1, 1875, without the written permission of deft., except at more than fifty miles from London, & out of the season of the theatre; that pltf. agreed to be in London without fail at least six days before the commencement of his engagement for the purpose of rehearsals. Averment, that pltf. did not sing anywhere in the United Kingdom from Jan. 1, 1875, to the date of the commencement of the action; that pltf. was prevented by temporary illness from being in London before Mar. 28, 1875, on which day he arrived in London; & that, save as aforesaid, he was & is ready to perform his part of the contract. Breach, that deft. refused to receive pltf. into his service. Plea, that pltf. was not in London six days before the commencement of the engagement ready for rehearsals, as was necessary for him to be, wherefore deft. refused to receive pltf. into his service. Demurrer: —Held: the stipulation as to rehearsals was not a condition precedent; for it did not go to the root of the matter, as pltf. was to sing in concerts at halls & drawing-rooms as well as at the theatre, & was also to abstain from singing within fifty miles of London from Jan. 1 previous to the commencement of the engagement Mar. 30. The plea was therefore bad.—BETTINI v. GYE (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 183; 45 L. J. Q. B. 209; 34 L. T. 246; 40 J. P. 453; 24 W. R. 551.

SUB-SECT. 2.—BY MASTER.

Performance of contracts generally, see CONTRACT, Vol. XII., pp. 303 et seq.

733. Neglect of master to find other situation —In accordance with agreement.]—Declaration upon an agreement, which stipulated, amongst other things, that it had been mutually agreed between pltf. & deft.; &, pltf. agreed that he would serve deft. as a manufacturer & assistant for the term of seven years, at a salary of £100 per annum, etc.; deft. agreed to pay the yearly salary, & if he should, from any cause, give up his business as a manufacturer, or not require pltf.'s services, then that he would use his best endeavours to procure for pltf. employment in some similar business, & for which he would receive a salary of not less than £100 per annum, or in case he should be unable to do so, deft. would pay the yearly salary of £100 during the residue of the term of seven years. Averment of performance on the part of pltf. Breach, that deft. did not continue pltf. in his employ until the expiration of the seven years, but refused to do so, & wrongfully discharged pltf. therefrom, without reasonable or probable cause, &, further, that although deft. had not continued pltf. in his employ, but had discharged him, yet deft. did not use his best or any endeavours to procure, nor did he procure pltf. employment in some similar business, for which he should receive a salary of £100 a year, but had wholly failed to find pltf. such employment. Plea, that at the time when pltf. was discharged, deft. was, & thence hitherto had been, wholly unable to procure for pltf. any such employment as in the agreement mentioned:—Held: (1) the agreement did not leave it open to deft. to pay pltf. after his discharge £100 a year without first using any endeavours to obtain a situation for pltf.; but the undertaking by deft. to use his best endeavours to procure employment for pltf. in some similar business was a primary part of the agreement, which deft. was bound to fulfil, & that part of the breach was good; (2) it was not necessary to aver a request by pltf. that deft. would use his best endeavours; the allegation of performance was sufficient, without any averment of readiness & willingness, & the mode in which the breach was alleged rendered it unnecessary to aver that a reasonable time had elapsed.—RUST v. NOTTIDGE (1852), 1 E. & B. 99; 22 L. 736. Wrongful dismissal—Variation of agreement—Question for jury.]—In an action for a wrongful dismissal of a servant, who had been retained under an annual salary, but had assented to a proposal not to be paid further salary until works should be resumed, which had not in fact been resumed:—Held: it was for the jury whether the original contract had been put an end to, & if so, the defence arose under a plea of rescission.—HOPKINS v. WANOSTROCHT (1861), 2 F. & F. 368.

737. —— Sale of business.]—(1) A master paying a clerk his salary two days before the end of the quarter, & telling him that the business is disposed of, does not necessarily amount to a dismissal, & therefore his service & salary may continue during the next quarter.

(2) Action of indebitatus assumpsit for work & labour will lie if a servant be engaged for a fixed period, & the master without dismissing him, refuses to supply him with work.—COOK v. SHERWOOD (1863), 2 New Rep. 28; 11 W. R. 595.

Sect. 1.—What amounts to breach: Sub-sect. 2. Sects. 2 & 3: Sub-sect. 1, A. & B.; sub-sect. 2, A.]

The agent was to use his best endeavours to obtain orders for the co.'s said goods at prices to be from time to time agreed upon, & all orders obtained by the agent were at once to be communicated to the co., who upon approving or rejecting the same were to inform the agent thereof & who were to carry out such orders as were accepted without undue delay; & the agent was not definitely to accept orders for the co., but only subject to confirmation & acceptance by the co. such confirmation or acceptance not to be unreasonably withheld. The co. were to pay the agent a commission upon the invoiced prices of all goods delivered by the co. & duly paid for by the respective purchasers. A few months afterwards the co. required fresh capital, & they applied to pltf. to assist them in finding it, telling him that otherwise they would have to close down. Pltf. tried to do so, but failed. The co. then asked pltf. to give up the agency for the Manchester district, telling him that he would have to stand down so far as that district was concerned, in which case they thought that they could find the necessary capital, but he refused. The co. thereupon, being insolvent, passed resolutions for voluntary winding up & ceased to do business through pltf., & eventually sold their business. In an action to recover damages for breach of the agreement to employ pltf. as their agent for the seven years:—Held: the agreement was to employ pltf. as agent for the seven years, & a term could not be implied to the effect that the co. could terminate the agency at any time by ceasing to carry on their business; & the circumstances, coupled with the voluntary winding up, showed a repudiation by the co. of the agreement, & they were therefore liable in damages for the breach.—REIGATE v. UNION MANUFACTURING CO. 740. —— Resignation procured through pressure.]—In an action for balance of salary & for wrongful dismissal brought by pltf., who had been engaged by defts. as manager of their music hall, defts. set up as a bar to the claim an arrangement which was come to in the course of a discussion in which pltf. was asked to explain some alleged irregularities in his accounts, which arrangement was embodied in a deed executed by pltf. under which he was to send in his resignation & was to accept in settlement of cross claims between him & defts. a certain sum for salary, & was to sign the deed of release. Pltf. replied that he was induced to execute the deed by defts.' threat unlawfully to imprison him, & that he executed it when overwhelmed by the threat, & that he gave no real or free consent to its execution. The jury having negatived the threats by defts. of criminal proceedings or imprisonment, but having found that pltf. was induced to make the agreement by undue pressure exercised by defts. to force him to make it:—Held: the undue pressure so found was not sufficient in law to entitle pltf. to set aside the arrangement or the deed which embodied it, & to fall back upon his original claims; &, further, as pltf. had tendered his resignation, which was accepted, there was no wrongful dismissal.—BARNES v. RICHARDS (1902), 71 L. 741. —— Letter posted outside jurisdiction—Not breach within jurisdiction.]—When a servant is wrongfully dismissed by a letter posted by the employer abroad & received by the servant within the jurisdiction, there is no breach within the jurisdiction of the contract to employ, & leave cannot be given to serve out of the jurisdiction notice of the writ in an action by the servant for wrongful dismissal, under R. S. C., Ord. II., r. 1 (e).—HOLLAND v. BENNETT, [1902] 1 K. B. 867; 71 L. J. K. B. 490; 86 L. T. 485; 50 W. R. 401; 18 T. L. R. 510; 46 Sol. Jo. 431, C. A.

745. Servant must elect remedy—Continuing or rescinded contract.]—A clerk dismissed in the middle of a quarter brought an action for a wrongful dismissal, the declaration containing a special count for such dismissal. The jury were directed not to take into account the services actually rendered during the broken quarter, as they were not recoverable except under an indebitatus count; & they gave damages accordingly. Pltf. then brought a second action to recover under an indebitatus count for his services during the broken quarter:—Held: the action was not maintainable; because pltf., by his former action on the special contract, had treated it as an open contract, & he could not afterwards recover under the indebitatus count, as for services under a rescinded contract; &, in the former action, the jury ought to have been directed to take the services rendered during the broken quarter into account, in awarding damages under the special count for the wrongful dismissal. Semble: under an indebitatus count, the servant, wrongfully dismissed before the termination of the period for which he was hired, cannot recover his whole wages up to such termination, as for a constructive service, but can recover only in respect of his service up to the time of his dismissal.

In a case like this the servant may either treat the contract as rescinded & bring indebitatus or he may sue on the contract; but he cannot do both (COLERIDGE, J.).—GOODMAN v. POCOCK (1850), 15 Q. B. 576; 19 L. J. Q. B. 410; 14 Jur. 1042; 117 E. R. 577.

746. Effect of reference to arbitration.]—Declaration stated that in consideration that pltf., at the request of deft., would enter into the employ of deft. in a certain capacity for a year, at the rate of five guineas per week throughout the year, deft.

undertook to employ him for a year, & alleged as a breach that deft. dismissed pltf. from his employ before the end of the year without any reasonable or probable cause. The declaration contained counts for wages, & for work & labour, etc. The cause, which was commenced before the expiration of the year, was referred to an arbitrator, who awarded pltf. a sum of money equivalent in amount to the wages he would have been entitled to receive from deft. on the day when the action was commenced. No claim was made before the arbitrator for any compensation in damages for the dismissal, except so far as the special count in the declaration, & the evidence of the employment & the dismissal might amount to such a claim. Pltf. having afterwards brought an action to recover compensation in damages in consequence of the dismissal from deft.'s employ before the end of the year:—Held: the award of the arbitrator was a bar to such action.—DUNN v. MURRAY (1829), 9 B. & C. 780; 4 Man. & Ry. 750. —— Breach of duty to master—Insertion of libel.]—The proprietor of a newspaper, who has been convicted & fined for a libel inserted therein by the editor without his knowledge or consent, cannot, it seems, maintain an action against the editor for the damages occasioned by the conviction.

A declaration stated that deft. had been employed & retained by pltf. as the editor of a publication called the "Court Journal," for reward in that behalf, & that he did not perform the duties of editing the same in a proper manner, but without the knowledge, leave, authority or consent of pltf., falsely, maliciously, & negligently inserted & published in the same a false & malicious libel, etc. That afterwards, an information was exhibited against pltf. for the falsely & maliciously printing & publishing of the libel, & such proceedings were thereupon had that pltf. was convicted of that offence, & fined £100:—Held: in arrest of judgment, the declaration was insufficient, as it did not appear that the printing & publishing, which was the act for which pltf. was convicted, was the same act as that alleged in the declaration as a breach of duty, i.e. the inserting & publishing, & therefore, the injury sustained was not properly connected with that breach of duty.—COLBURN v. PATMORE (1834), 1 Cr. 751. —— —— Failure to render accounts.]—A commercial traveller being employed by a merchants' house, under an agreement, with six months' mutual notice, gave such notice & left their service, having from time to time rendered general accounts, but not a special one, on a particular occasion, when he was requested by letter sent after him to do so. A bill was filed against him, charging misconduct, & asking for a special account during his whole term of service, & payment by way of damages or otherwise, such misconduct being denied:—Held: (1) although pltfs. were entitled to an account, it was not the practice of merchants to require more than had been rendered, &, therefore, there would only be an account from the date of the letter, although there were no settled accounts; (2) the ct. had no jurisdiction to decree payment by way of damages.—HUNTER v. BELCHER (1863), 9 L. Applt. was accused of certain irregularities in his work. An investigation was held on behalf of the co. at which applt. was present, & as a result of this investigation applt. was dismissed from his position of passenger conductor in the co.'s employment. Instead of appealing to the higher officials under art. 10 of the agreement he brought an action against the co. claiming damages for alleged wrongful dismissal upon the footing that the co. had violated, by inaccuracy & impropriety of procedure art. 10 of the agreement:—Held: the allegations made by applt. against the regularity or propriety of the investigation being proved to be unfounded the action failed.—CAVEN v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. On Feb. 24, 1866, applts. refused to give resp. work. On Mar. 16, 1846, resp. entered a plaint in a county ct. against applts.; & in his particulars alleged that applts. had neglected & refused to perform, & had not performed, their agreement, whereby resp. had sustained damages to the amount of £7 14*s.*, being four weeks' average wages in lieu of notice. Applts. paid £7 14*s.* & the costs into ct. on Apr. 19, 1866. On the next day, Apr. 20, resp. again went to work for applts., but was dismissed on Apr. 21. On July 4, 1866, resp. entered another plaint against applts., & in his particulars alleged that applts. refused to employ resp., but illegally discharged him from their service, & claimed £48 12*s.* At the trial the jury found a verdict for resp. for £33 12*s.* It was admitted that the agreement sued on in the first plaint was the same agreement as was sued on in the second plaint:—Held: there was no evidence to go to the jury of such agreement, & the judge ought to have directed a nonsuit.—BARNSLEY v. TAYLOR (1867), 37 L. 765. ——.] — Declaration alleged that, on Oct. 15, in consideration that pltf., at deft.'s request, would enter deft.'s service, & serve him for a certain time, from the day & year till the service should be determined, by reasonable notice in that behalf on either side, for a salary named, deft. promised pltf. to retain & employ him on the terms aforesaid, & pay him such salary, & continue him in such service until such service should be determined by reasonable notice, as before; that pltf., on the day & year, entered the service of deft. on the terms, & had always, from the commencement thereof hitherto, been ready & willing to remain & continue in the service, etc., & during all that time tendered & offered himself to serve deft. in such service, etc., of all which deft. during all that time had notice; yet deft. did not nor could continue pltf. in his service, but, on the contrary thereof, on the same day & year aforesaid, refused to suffer pltf. to continue any longer in the said service, & discharged pltf. therefrom, without any previous notice in that behalf, & without any reasonable or probable cause in that behalf, & had, thence hitherto, refused any longer to retain pltf. in his said service. On special demurrer:—Held: (1) the word "from" was, on this record, to be taken as including Oct. 15, within the time of service contracted for; & it could not therefore be objected that deft. appeared to have discharged pltf. from the service before its commencement; (2) the declaration was not double for averring pltf.'s willingness to serve as well as his tender; & issue might have been taken on the tender alone; (3) the declaration was not bad for want of an allegation pltf. had given no notice to determine the service, there being an averment that he always was willing to serve & continually tendered himself to do so, of which deft. had notice.—WILKINSON v. GASTON (1846), 9 Q. The gist of this averment is the readiness which implies the ability & willingness of pltf. to continue the services from which deft. wrongfully dismissed him. If pltf., therefore, is ready & willing, it is not at all necessary that he should offer to continue in the service of deft. when he has been once sent wrongfully away.—WALLIS v. WARREN (1849), 4 Exch. 361; 7 Dow. & L. 58; 18 L. Pltf., by the instructions of the manager, continued for more than six months to discharge his former duties at the same salary. The business was then sold to a new co., and pltf. was dismissed without notice. In an action for wrongful dismissal:—Held: the appointment of a manager & receiver operated to discharge the servants of the co., & deft. could not recover.

Before the expiration of the term pltf. was wrongfully dismissed, & ordered to leave the house which deft. had elected to put him into, but he refused to do so, & deft. accordingly removed his goods & furniture into a barn from which pltf. might have taken them if he had chosen to do so. During the time that the goods were there, the barn was broken into, & some of the goods damaged, & £70 taken from a bureau. In a declaration containing a count for wrongful dismissal, in which special damages were claimed for loss of money & damage to goods, & also a count in trover:—Held: in assessing the damages the jury had a right to take into consideration the "gift" of £20 which pltf. would have earned if he had been allowed to do so, but not the sums for the damage to the goods, or the money lost from the bureau, as there was no relationship existing between the pltf. & deft. of landlord & tenant, & therefore deft. had a right to remove the goods, & could not be held liable for the damage or loss which happened either under the count for breach of the agreement or in the count in trover.

Pltf. had no estate in the house . . . & deft. had a perfect right to turn him out (ERLE, C.J.).—LAKE v. CAMPBELL (1862), 5 L. T. 582.

782. — — — —.]—The right to bring an action for wrongful dismissal is a mere illustration of the general legal rule that an action will lie for unjustifiable repudiation of a contract.

In Nov. 1915, by an agreement in writing defts., a co. carrying on an establishment controlled under Munitions of War Act, 1915 (c. 54), appointed pltf. general manager of its works for three years at a fixed salary & a commission upon the net profits of the business available for dividend upon a rising scale & if the net profits for the second & third year together amounted to a certain sum the agreement was to be continued for a further period of three years upon the same terms & conditions. In Jan. 1917, defts. purported to suspend pltf. from the exercise of his duties pending an investigation as to his efficiency; they also compelled him to deliver up the badge he held as a person engaged in munition work at a controlled establishment on the ground that he was no longer indispensable & they appointed another person to take charge of the works instead of pltf., & on the following day they took from him his business keys & informed him that he must not return to the works as he was not wanted, & required him to deliver up all cash belonging to them. As a result of these acts pltf. elected to treat the contract as repudiated by defts. & claimed damages for wrongful dismissal:—Held: defts. had wrongfully repudiated their contract, & pltf. was therefore entitled to damages, inasmuch as defts. absolutely forbade him to fulfil any of his duties, they prevented him from exerting his opportunities as a manager to gain commission upon the net profits of the co., & they decisively ended his attendance at the premises.

To-day it is well settled that a master may dismiss his servant for many reasons, such as misconduct, substantial negligence, dishonesty, & the like (MCCARDIE, J.).—Ite RUBEL BRONZE & METAL CO. & VOS, [1918] 1 K. vas thereupon appointed a collector, in J.'s place s district. A few months afterwards, with their nowledge & approval, he purchased & paid £50 or the collecting book of K., another collector. n the first page of each book was the usual printed notice: "The collectors shall be furnished with books at the society's expense. Such books to be the society's property;" & on the back of each book, as was the usual practice, there was printed pltf.'s name, & also defts.' name. Pltf. was subsequently dismissed from his office of collector, & in an action by him, in the Liverpool Passage Ct., to recover damages from defts. for wrongful dismissal & the detention of his collecting books, the jury found that he was rightfully dismissed, & that he had an interest in the books amounting to £50, whereupon judgment was entered for defts. on the claim for wrongful dismissal, & for pltf. as to the books for £50, damages 1s. On appeal from the finding & judgment in favour of pltf.:—Held: the books were the property of the society, & pltf. had never any property, or any interest whatever in them, recognisable by law or giving him any right of action against defts., & the question of his interest n the books ought not to have been left to the jury.

Had pltf. been wrongfully dismissed, the fact of his having paid money for the books, a order to obtain the appointment of collector, might have been a matter to go to the jury for their consideration with regard to the amount of damages for wrongful dismissal (STEPHEN, J.).—ELLWOOD v. LIVERPOOL VICTORIA LEGAL FRIENDLY SOCIETY (1880), 42 L. 788. Injury to reputation—Musical director.]—By an agreement of Aug. 18, 1892, deft. co. engaged pltf. as musical director of their theatre until Oct. 1, 1895, upon certain terms as to salary, with a provision that pltf.'s name should be announced in certain daily newspapers, & on bills & programmes. It appeared that the most important duty of a musical director is to conduct the orchestra. Pltf. had conducted three pieces at defts.' theatre with perfect success when a piece was brought out which was conducted by the composer. Since that time pltf. had not been called on to conduct or perform the duties of his office, but his salary had been paid under the agreement, & it was common ground that he was still musical director of the theatre:—Held: the stipulation that pltf.'s name should appear as musical director meant, that such a state of things should exist that defts. should be in a position truly to make such an announcement; or, in other words, that they should employ him in that capacity, & pltf., though it had not been shown that his non-employment had interfered with his obtaining another post, was entitled to more than nominal damages.—BUNNING v. LYRIC THEATRE, LTD. 789. —— Commercial traveller.]—A commercial traveller was engaged for a term. By the contract he was to travel in certain countries, & was to receive a salary of £500 & a fixed allowance per day as travelling expenses. During the continuance of the engagement his employers found that, owing to a fall in prices, it was no longer profitable to take orders in the countries travelled by him. They thereupon refused to send him on further journeys, & refused to pay him the allowance for travelling expenses or any part thereof, but continued to pay him his salary. He sued them for damages for the injury done to the goodwill of his trade connection by their refusal to send him on journeys, & for the loss of the proportion of his allowance for travelling expenses which by economy he was able to save when travelling:—Held: the action would not lie.—LAGERWALL v. WILKINSON, HENDERSON & CLARKE, LTD. Jurisdiction to refer to official referee—Matters of account.]—Pltf. brought an action against defts. for damages for wrongful dismissal, for balance of account for money paid to deft.'s use, & for an account of profits on sales on which pltf. claimed commission. Defts. justified the dismissal on the ground that pltf. had misconducted himself by wilfully disobeying the reasonable orders of defts., & by habitually neglecting his duties, & by converting to his own use money which he had received to the use of deft. By order of a judge at chambers the issues in the action were referred to an official referee under Jud. 812. ——.]—The first count of a declaration in assumpsit alleged that pltf. was employed by defts. as a carman, at wages after the rate of £160 a year, & claimed damages for his discharge without just cause during the year: there was also a count for work & labour. The particulars of demand stated, that pltf. besides seeking to recover damages under the special count, also sought to recover, under the indebitatus count, £37, the balance of account for a quarter's work done by him for defts., commencing on June 30, & ending on Sept. 30, 1842, after giving credit for £3 paid on account thereof. It appeared in evidence that pltf. was discharged on July 30, 1842, for misconduct, which the jury found to be a sufficient cause for his dismissal; that he worked out that day, & that on the next morning deft. sent for him, & he remained working there that day also, & then left. The jury found that the value of those two days' work was 40*s.* but that he was entitled to a month's wages, & he accordingly had a verdict for £10 6*s.* 8*d.* allowing for the £3 which had been paid in advance:—Held: pltf. was not precluded by his particulars from recovering this sum.—HURCUM v. STERICKER (1842), 10 M. & W. 553; 2 Dowl. (2) To the same count deft. pleaded two justifications: first, that pltf., being ordered by deft. to reap a corn field till 8 p.m., refused to continue at the work after 4 p.m., &, wrongfully & in breach of his duty & the command, absented himself, wherefore deft. discharged him from his service: secondly, that pltf. unlawfully quitted his work

826. —— ——.]—The agreement seems to me to be clearly a contract of hiring & service. It is specified what the party is to do, & what he is not to do, for the £100, which he is to receive at the end of the year. Surely this is an agreement, on the one hand, to hire for the particular service, at a given salary, for a year at least, &, on the other, to serve in the specified matters on those terms. . . . He is said to have the election of treating the contract as continuing, & suing for damages for the breach by the discharge; or, of treating it as. & acquiescing in its being, rescinded by the wrongful act of the master, & bringing an action on the quantum meruit for the work actually performed; & it is added, that he may wait till the termination of the period for which he was hired, & may then, perhaps, sue in indebitatus assumpsit for the whole wages, relying on the doctrine of constructive service. It is clear, since the decision of Fewings v. Tisdal, No. 571, ante, that this last remedy cannot be maintained in the shape of indebitatus assumpsit; for the simple reason, that the allegation of his being indebted for work done is untrue. But that decision may be supported on the form of action; & the question is still left undecided, how far a special action of debt averring a contract to pay, a continuing readiness on the part of the servant during all the period to serve, & a dispensation from the service on the part of the master, might not be maintained (CROMPTON, J.).—EMMENS v. ELDERTON (1853), 13 C. 828. Plaint for wages—Prior summons before justices dismissed—For wages & damages—Res judicata.]—(1) M. & D., journeymen painters, took out a summons returnable before a justice of the peace for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due to them for wages from C., claiming also a further sum as damages for the detention of such wages. The justice heard the summons under Master & Servant Act, 1867 (c. 141), s. 9, & dismissed the same upon the merits. M. & D. then issued plaints in the county ct. against C. to recover the wages alone, but judgment was given for deft. on the ground that the case was res judicata:—Held: the county ct. judge was right, & the justice of the peace having jurisdiction under ss. 4 & 9 of Master & Servant Act, 1867, & having exercised that jurisdiction, the matter was res judicata.

(2) Wages due from an employer to a journeyman may be summarily recovered by a summons before a justice of the peace under Master & Servant Act, 1867 (c. 141), ss. 4 & 9, & this although the servant does not make any claim for damages in respect of the non-payment of such wages, but seeks to recover the wages alone. 829. —— Judgment for servant—Subsequent summary proceedings by employers—On different matter.]—By Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 3, in any proceeding before a county ct. in relation to any dispute between an employer & a workman arising out of or incidental to their relation as such, the ct. may adjust & set off the one against the other all such claims on the part either of the employer or of the workman, arising out of or incidental to the relation between them, as the ct. may find to be subsisting, whether such claims are liquidated or unliquidated, & are for wages, damages, or otherwise. By sect. 4, a dispute under the Act between an employer & a workman may be heard & determined by a ct. of summary jurisdiction, & such ct., for the purpose of this Act, shall be deemed to be a ct. of civil jurisdiction, & in a proceeding in relation to any such dispute, the ct. may order payment of any sum which it may find to be due as wages, or damages, or otherwise, provided that the amount claimed does not exceed £10.

Applt., who was employed as a spinner by resps., was discharged for neglecting his work, & resps. refused to pay him wages in lieu of notice. He thereupon took proceedings against them in the county ct. At the hearing, evidence was produced to show that he had been guilty of negligence, but no set-off or counter-claim was set up. A verdict was given for applt. for £3 10*s*.

Resps. subsequently took proceedings against him before justices for wrongfully & negligently damaging their materials, & the justices ordered him to pay £8 8*s*. On appeal from this order: —Held: the justices had power to make it; for the only question decided by the county ct. was whether he had been guilty of such negligence as would justify his dismissal without notice.—HINDLEY v. HASLAM (1878), 3 Q. SUB-SECT. 2.—IN COURTS OF SUMMARY JURISDICTION.

A. Jurisdiction of Court.

See, now, Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90).

830. Jurisdiction to deal with all matters in dispute.]—(1) The effect of Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), ss. 3, 4, is to give the widest powers to a ct. of summary jurisdiction, when a dispute between a workman & his employer comes before it, to deal not only with the strict & technical claim which one side or the other makes in the dispute, but to deal with all claims which in the course of the hearing it may turn out have been made by the workman against the master or by the master against the workman.

(2) A workman absented himself from his work for one day without leave from his employers. The employers did not dismiss but suspended him from working on the following day, whereby the workman was prevented from earning the wages he would have earned on that day had he been allowed to work, namely 6*s*. 2*d*. The workman thereupon made a claim under Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90) before justices sitting as a ct. of summary jurisdiction for 6*s*. 2*d*. damages for wrongful dismissal:—Held: although upon the facts the workman's claim ought technically to gave been for damages for refusing to allow him to perform his contract of service, the justices had jurisdiction under Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 3, 4 to adjudicate upon the claim without an amendment, & to give the workman such damages as he would have been entitled to upon the claim with any proper amendment.

(3) Although the employers might have had a right to damages against the workman they had no right to suspend him from working for the one day, inasmuch as by so doing they were taking upon themselves, after declining to dismiss the workman and electing to treat the contract as a continuing one, to assess their own damages for the workman's default at the sum of which would be represented by one day's wages. The workman was therefore entitled to be awarded under the denomination of wages or damages the sum 6*s*. 2*d*. which represented the wages he would have earned on the day he was suspended but which he did not earn owing to the employer's breach of contract.—HANLEY v. PEASE & PARTNERS, LTD., [1915] 1 K. 831. In respect of what subject-matter—Adjustment & set-off.]—Upon a complaint under 20 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, by an artificer against his master for nonpayment of wages, the justices may make a deduction from the wages on the ground that the work was badly done.—SHARP v. HAINSWORTH (1862), 3 B. & S. 139; 1 New Rep. 24; 32 L. 832. —— —— Employer's claim for damages against wages due—No claim for wages made.]—A workman owed his employer money for damages for breach of contract. The employer owed the workman wages. Upon a summons by the employer against the workman claiming the damages & that the damages & the wages should be adjusted & set off, the workman contended that the ct. had no jurisdiction to set off the damages against a claim for wages which he had not made:—

During the employment, owing to various causes applt. was not employed fc certain periods, & no wages were paid to him in respect of those periods, but the wages were settled up at the end of each week when the deductions were made:—Held: applt. could not recover the amount of these deductions at the end of the employment, as it was a claim that could be waived, being a claim for damages, & not a liquidated debt.—STODDART v. MITCHELL (W.), LTD. Previous action in county court—Subject matter same.]—A servant in husbandry having been hired to serve from Aug. 1, 1858, to Martinmas next ensuing, for the wages of £5, entered the service, & continued in it till Sept. 7, 1858, when her master discharged her. Thereupon she sued him in the county ct., claiming damages for the discharge, as having been without reasonable cause. The judge of the county ct. gave a verdict for the master, deft. in the suit. Afterwards, in May, 1859, the servant took out a summons before justices against the master, to recover the £5 wages:—Held: the question for decision in the county ct. & by the justices being substantially the same, namely, whether the discharge of the servant was without just cause, the justices were bound to treat the decision of the county ct., a ct. of concurrent jurisdiction, upon it, as conclusive between the parties; although the form of claim in the summons varied from that made in the county ct.—ROUTLEDGE v. HISLOP (1860), 2 E. & E. 549; 29 L. As to National Health Insurance, see WORK & LABOUR.

857. Duty to provide & care for servant during illness.]—If the servant is taken ill, by the visitation of God, it is a condition incident to humanity & is implied in all contracts. Therefore the master is bound to provide for & take care of the servant so taken ill in his service; & cannot deduct wages in proportion to the continuance of the servant's sickness (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—R. v. CHRIST-CHURCH (INHABITANTS) (1760), Burr. 861. —— Domestic servant.]—It seems that a master is not bound to provide a menial servant with medical attendance & medicines during sickness; but if a servant fall ill, & the master call in his own medical man to attend such servant, the master will not be allowed to deduct the charge for such medical attendance out of the servant's wages, unless there be a special contract between the master & servant that he should do so.—SELLEN v. NORMAN (1829), 4 C. & P. 80, N. 870. —— —— Non-disclosure of dishonesty of servant—Dishonesty not cause of dismissal.]—Declaration in an action for giving a false character of P., a clerk, alleged that deft. fraudulently represented to pltf. that the reason why he had dismissed P. from his employ was, the decrease in his business, & that deft. recommended pltf. to try P., & knowingly suppressed & concealed from pltf. the fact that P. had been dismissed from his employ on account of dishonesty. It appeared at the trial, that P. had been guilty of dishonesty while in deft.'s employ, but that deft. had not mentioned that fact to pltf. when he recommended him to try P. It further appeared, however, that P. had not been dismissed from deft.'s employ on account of his dishonesty, but really for the reason which deft. had assigned to pltf.:—Held: this evidence did not support the declaration.—WILKIN v. REED (1854), 15 C. 901. —— Lawful commands.]—To a declaration upon an indenture of apprenticeship for a breach of covenant to instruct the apprentice in the art & trade of a chemist & druggist, & to provide him with sufficient diet, etc., deft. pleaded that the apprentice did not faithfully serve deft. or behave himself as a faithful apprentice, but, on the contrary thereof, conducted himself in so improper & unfaithful & dishonest a manner in deft.'s business, & defrauded & robbed deft., so that it became unsafe for deft. to continue the apprentice in his service, wherefore he dismissed him:—Held: the plea was bad, as affording no answer to the action.

In the simple relation of master & servant the servant is bound to obey all the lawful commands of his master (WATSON, B.).—PHILLIPS v. CLIFT (1859), 4 H. & N. 168; 28 L. J. Ex. 153; 32 L. T. O. S. 282; 23 J. P. 120; 5 Jur. N. S. 74; 7 W. R. 295; 157 E. R 801.

903. Submission to medical examination—Suspected pregnancy.]—Pltf.'s mistress requested a doctor to examine pltf., who was a domestic servant, in order to ascertain whether she was pregnant. Pltf. objected to the examination, but undressed by the doctor's orders & submitted to be examined. The doctor examined her, & ascertained that she was not pregnant. He used no violence or threats & did nothing more than was necessary for the examination. The mistress was not present. Pltf. sued her master & mistress & the doctor for assault. At the trial the judge directed a verdict for the master & mistress, & the jury found a verdict for the doctor:—Held: there was no evidence against the master & mistress, the verdict in favour of the doctor was right, & a rule for a new trial was rightly discharged.

Very likely pltf. thought defts. had a right to have her examined; but the truth is she submitted to it & it is impossible to say the jury were wrong in finding that she submitted. She may have submitted under an erroneous notion of law, but it was not through fear of violence (BRAMWELL, L.J.).—LATTER v. BRADDELL (1881), 50 L. J. Q. B. 448; 44 L. T. 369; 45 J. P. 520; 29 W. PART VIII. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.

q. General rule.]—While a servant cannot, in the course of his employment, & in connection with the services he has agreed to render to his master, earn for his own benefit any remuneration or profit, he can do so in connection with any collateral or independent work or business, not carried on in competition with that of the master.—JONES v. LINDE BRITISH REFRIGERATION CO. 908. —— ——.]—The promoter of pltf. co. agreed with deft. that he should be employed as managing director of the intended co. for five years at a yearly salary. By the arts. of assocn. it was provided that deft. should be managing director for five years at the yearly salary mentioned in the agreement, payable quarterly. Afterwards the co. by a written instrument adopted the agreement between the promoter & deft. Deft., on behalf of the co. contracted for the construction of certain fishing smacks, &, unknown to the co., took a commission from the shipbuilders on the contract. Several months afterwards pltf. co. at an extraordinary meeting passed a resolution dismissing deft. from his office on the ground of other alleged acts of misconduct, which they were not able to substantiate in the action; being at that time ignorant of his receipt of the commission from the shipbuilders. Deft. was a shareholder in an ice co. & a fish-carrying co., which paid, in addition to the ordinary dividends, bonuses to shareholders who were owners of fishing smacks & who employed the cos. in supplying ice & carrying for them. Deft. employed these cos. in respect of pltfs.' smacks, & received bonuses as if the smacks were his own. Pltf. co. brought an action against deft. for an account of commissions & bonuses received by him, & for damages for alleged breaches of duty; & deft. counterclaimed for wrongful dismissal & for the salary for the quarter which had expired before his dismissal: Held: (1) the receipt of a commission from the shipbuilding co. was good ground for dismissal, although it was not discovered till after the dismissal had taken place, & although it happened several months previously, & might have been an isolated act; (2) deft. must account to pltfs. for the bonuses received from the ice & carrying cos., as they had been paid in respect of pltfs.' smacks; although pltfs. could not themselves have received the bonuses, not being shareholders of the cos.—BOSTON DEEP SEA FISHING & ICE CO. v. ANSELL (1888), 39 Ch. Pltf. applied for an order that he might be at liberty to interrogate deft. as to the contents of the documents scheduled to his affidavit:—Held: the application must be refused, inasmuch as a person in the position of a servant cannot be required to answer an interrogatory asking him to give the contents of documents in the possession of his master.—BALFOUR v. TILLETT (1913), 29 T. The parties agreed to submit themselves in all cases of dispute to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Leipzig Cts. & to the exclusive applicability of the German law. After the expiration of three months' previous notice to determine the agreement, deft. left pltf.'s employment on May 1, 1908, & entered the service of a rival English firm. Pltfs. then issued the writ in this action for injunction & other relief. Deft. entered a conditional appearance & applied by summons to stay proceedings on the ground that the disputes should be referred to the Leipzig Ct.:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to the injunction asked, on the ground that the existence of any implied contract on the part of an employee after the determination of his service not to divulge information acquired during it necessarily involved the construction of the written contract which the ct. was precluded from construing by the express agreement of the parties, & therefore, no cause had been shown why the Servant held out as having authority.]—If a master send a clerk, who has the general management of his cash concerns, with a note to a banker to receive the money, & the servant, instead of so doing, gets another person to give him a draft upon the banker for it, & the banker fails before the draft is presented, the master is liable for the loss.

A servant by transacting affairs for his master does thereby derive a general authority & credit from him (per CUR.).—NICKSON v. BROHAN (1712), 10 Mod. Rep. 109; 88 E. R. 649.

957. —— Authority to buy on credit on previous occasions.]—Deft., a linen draper in Yorkshire, had in several instances employed A., as his agent, to purchase on credit goods of pltfs., linen drapers in London. A. without the authority of deft., orders goods in his name to be sent by the usual conveyance, & intercepts them to his own use :—Held : deft. is liable for such goods, he having by previous dealings authorised pltfs. to treat A. as his agent.—TODD v. ROBINSON (1825), Ry. & M. 217, N. 958. —— Housekeeper.]—A baker delivered bread from week to week, & was paid many sums by the housekeeper of his customer, & receipted weekly bills for a period of time subsequent to a time for which the housekeeper had not paid him. In an action by him to recover from his customer the amount of the unpaid bills :—Held : the question of negligence was not raised, & pltf. was entitled to the verdict, as deft. did not prove that he had given the housekeeper money for the purpose of paying the bills in question.—MILLER v. HAMILTON (1832), 5 C. & P. 433, N. 959. —— Secretary of company.]—Pltf. brought his action for goods supplied in 1866 to a mining co. conducted on the cost book principle, of which co. deft. was a shareholder. The last change of partners was in Dec. 1865. To prove his claim, pltf. proved an order by the purser to supply goods, gave general evidence of supply, & put in evidence accounts specifying the amount supplied, submitted by the purser to & passed by the managing committee of the co. It appeared also that payments had been made in 1866, which pltf. had appropriated to a debt incurred before Dec. 1865 :—Held : (1) there was evidence of the amount supplied ; (2) pltf. was justified in his appropriation.—GEAKE v. JACKSON (1867), 36 L. C. Revocation of Authority.

960. Servant with authority to pledge credit—Order to servant.]—Although, where a servant has once been held out by his master as having authority to pledge his credit, that authority cannot be withdrawn merely by orders to the servant, but there must be notice to the tradesman ; yet, without express evidence of actual notice, there may be evidence from all the circumstances ; as, lapse of time, the not sending in accounts, etc. ; from which it may be inferred that the tradesman must have known that there was no such authority, & that he did not contract on the credit of the master.—STAVELY v. UZIELLI (1860), 2 F. & F. 30.

962. Authority to pass property.]—A., on behalf of himself & certain other persons, resident in Scotland, his constituents, by deed engaged B. & C. to act as agents & managers in New South Wales, empowering them to purchase sheep, cattle & land, on behalf of A. & his constituents, for which purpose certain sums were remitted to the colony, to be invested for them & placed to their individual interest, & the proceeds of the stock, etc., were to be remitted to their respective credits. B. & C. were to receive for their trouble & expense one-third of the proceeds of the stock. With the money remitted B. & C. bought stock & lands & conducted the establishment in the colony in their own name. B. & C. afterwards became embarrassed & contracted liabilities in the management of the property, & drew bills on A. on account of the establishment, which bills were indorsed by D. & other parties in the colony ; these bills being dishonoured & B. & C. being pressed by the indorsees, executed a deed of assignment & conveyed the whole of the trust property, & some property of their own, to D., for himself & the other indorsees. D. had notice of the deed appointing B. & C. agents & managers & that there was no authority on the part of B. & C. to draw bills on behalf of their constituents, which could personally bind them. Upon a bill filed by A., & his constituents against B., C. & D., to set aside the deed of assignment, as fraudulent & void & for an account, the Supreme Ct. at Sydney held, that pltfs. were not entitled in equity to relief, & that their remedy was to sue D. at law :—Held : under the circumstances, B. & C. had, as such agents & managers, authority to dispose of the property entrusted to them, in discharge of the debts incurred by them on behalf of A., & his constituents, in the management of such property, & the deed of assignment was valid as against A. & his constituents, to the extent of subjecting such joint property to the payment of the debts & liabilities contracted, but null & void as to the residue, & an account directed to be taken in the ct. below, of such debts & liabilities.—BUTE (MARCHIONESS) v. MASON, Ex p. HEARD (1849), 7 Moo. 970. Distinguished from criminal liability.]—In a civil case masters are responsible for the acts of their servants, but I am not aware that in a criminal case that can be done (MARTIN, B.).—R. v. BARRY (1865), 4 F. & F. 389.

971. Liability to the public.]—Where servants are engaged in different departments of duty, an injury committed by one servant upon the other by carelessness or negligence will render the master liable in the same manner as if the injured servant were a stranger. There may be a nicety & difficulty sometimes in deciding whether common employment exists, but in general, by keeping in view what the servant must have known or expected to have been involved in the service which he undertakes, that difficulty may be got over.

For complaints by the public, the master is responsible. Thus, if a servant drives his master's carriage over a bystander; or if a gamekeeper, employed to kill game, fires at a hare so as to shoot a bystander; or if a workman, employed in building, negligently drops a stone from the scaffold, & so hurts a bystander; in all these cases the bystander is entitled to claim reparation from the master, because the master is bound to guarantee the public against all damage arising from the wrongful or careless acts of himself or of his servants.

Where an injury is occasioned to any one by the negligence of another, if the person injured seeks to charge with its consequences any person other than him who actually caused the damage, it lies on the person injured to show that the circumstances were such as to make some other person responsible. In general it is sufficient for this purpose to show that the person whose neglect caused his injury was at the time when it was occasioned acting not on his own account, but in the course of his employment as a servant in the business of a master. . . . In such a case the maxim respondeat superior prevails & the master is responsible (LORD CRANWORTH).—BARTONSHILL COAL CO. v. REID (1858), 3 Macq. 266; 31 L. T. O. S. 255; 22 J. P. 560; 4 Jur. N. 972. ——.]—(1) A master is liable for any injury or damage done to the public through the negligence or unskilfulness of servants acting in the master's employ. A. General Rule.

981. Master liable.]—A master is responsible for all acts done by his servant in the course of his employment, though without particular directions.—TURBERVILL v. STAMP (1697), Carth.

PART IX. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 4.—A.

981 i. Master liable.]—A master is not liable for the wrongful act of a servant, though intended to promote the master's interest, if it is an act outside the scope of the servant's employment & authority, & is one which the master himself could not legally do.—COLL v. TORONTO RY. CO. (1898), 25 A. R. 55.—CAN.

981 ii. ——.]—The doctrine of the liability of a master for his servant's negligence applies in the case of the implied relationship of master & servant sometimes existing between parent & child, but as in the case of master & servant so in that of parent & child there is no liability if at the

982. ——.] — The liability of a master for ignorance, neglect, or want of honesty in the conduct of his servant, while within the proper scope of his employment, is a rule universally recognised, & indeed essential to the protection of mankind in the transaction of their affairs. Nevertheless, it does appear to me exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to define with exactness the meaning of the phrase "within the scope of their employment." The present case, it has been contended, affords a clear exception to the general rule of the liability of the master for the acts of his servant, for in this case the injury inflicted on another party was the effect of wilful & malicious conduct on the part of the servant (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE DRUID (1842), 1 Wm. Rob. 391; 1 Notes of Cases, 444; 6 Jur. 441; 166 E. R. 619.

983. ——.] — Carters were employed by a contractor by the day to take rubbish from certain works to his dump & to tip it there, & were strictly forbidden to tip it anywhere else. Some of the carters, without the knowledge of the contractor, & in contravention of their orders, took the rubbish to a piece of unfenced land, the property of pltfs., & tipped it there. They did this for their own convenience & for a purpose of their own. The unfenced land was nearer to the works than the dump of the contractor. In an action by pltfs. against the contractor for an injunction:—Held: the illegal acts complained of were not within the sphere of the carters' employment, & consequently the contractor was not liable for them.—RAND v. CRAIG, [1919] 1 Ch. 1; sub nom. RANK (JOSEPH), LTD. v. CRAIG, 88 L. The manager sold a piece of furniture to a person who was lodging in pltf.'s house, & on one of the instalments being in arrear, went to the house & removed the furniture. While so doing he assaulted pltf. For the assault he was summoned, convicted & fined, & he paid the fine. In an action against deft. in respect of the assault the jury found that the manager committed the assault in the course of his employment: —Held: the mere fact that the assault was a criminal offence, & not only a tortious act, & the release of the servant, under Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 45, from civil proceedings for the assault, did not release deft. from liability.

If the expression scope of authority means authority, the case would be different; but it seems to me that it has exactly the same meaning as the expression course of employment, & the act complained of must be done in the course of the employment of the person doing it, though it may be beyond any authority actually given to him (RIGBY, L.J.).—DYER v. MUNDAY, [1895] 1 Q. Two of pltf.'s witnesses said it was the duty of W.'s carters to put the iron on the ground, & of the stevedore then to take it, & this was the only evidence as to the duty of deft. & his servants: —Held: it was a question for the jury whether, in the particular case, the foreman was acting within the scope of his employment.—BURNS v. POULSOM (1873), L. 1004. Whether binding on master—Railway company—Traveller with pass made out in another's name.]—In an action against a railway co., the declaration stated that pltf. was lawfully in a carriage on a public highway, & then alleged an injury sustained through the negligence of deft.'s servants. Defts. pleaded that pltf. was unlawfully, & not lawfully, in the carriage as alleged. The evidence was, that pltf. was travelling on defts.' railway with a pass ticket made out in the name of a person other than pltf., & which contained on the face of it a memorandum stating that it was not transferable, & that other person using it would be liable to some penalties, or be liable to pay the fare ; but which of these liabilities it specified was not distinctly proved :—Held : the pass ticket was not so clear as to render other circumstances immaterial, & therefore that evidence to show that other persons had often travelled with similar tickets not bearing the names of those who used them, & that some of those persons were personally known to some of the officers or servants of defts., & that in the present instance one of defts.' servants saw & examined pltf.'s pass, & then put him into the carriage, although there was no proof that pltf. himself was known to the person who placed him in the carriage, might be left for the consideration of the jury as some evidence that pltf. was lawfully in the carriage on the highway as alleged.—GREAT NORTHERN RY. 1006. —— —— ——.]—An infant two & a half years old, whose parents lived in a house close to defts.' line, went on the main line of the railway & was injured. The jury found that the child got on the line through a fence separating the railway from a high road ; that some of the railway servants knew that children were in the habit of playing on a pile of sleepers inside the fence, but did not know they were in the habit of getting on the main line ; that the fence was not reasonably fit for separating the railway from the high road, having regard to the proximity of the houses ; & that the children were in the habit of getting on to the pile of sleepers by the leave or licence of defts. :—Held : the leave & licence found by the jury did not extend to make defts. liable for what happened to a child going beyond the pile of sleepers on to the line, & judgment was rightly entered for defts.

It is not sufficient to say that some servant of the railway co. must have known of this. It depends what servant. The knowledge of an errand boy employed by the railway co. is not knowledge of the co., & to have a vague finding that some of defts.' servants must have known of this, & to deduce from that knowledge which must be imputed to the co., & thereby a licence imputed from the co. to the children to play on these sleepers, appears to me to be a series of very dangerous steps (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—JENKINS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. After it was over, & as pltf. was walking away in the public street, the railway policeman gave him in custody to a metropolitan constable, in contravention of his instructions from defts. In an action against the railway co. for assault & false imprisonment:—Held: they were not responsible for the acts of their policeman which were complained of, since they were beyond the scope of his employment.

(2) After being taken in custody, pltf. was prosecuted before a magistrate by defts.' attorney for assaulting the policeman in the execution of his duty:—Held: this was no ratification by defts. of their policeman's acts, for they could not ratify them unless they were done on their behalf or for their benefit; (3) if they were so done, the mere appearance of the attorney to prosecute would not be sufficient evidence of ratification.—WALKER v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. When he afterwards called about it at the factory, a detective was present, who asked the foreman if he gave pltf. in charge for stealing the tool, to which the foreman replied he must see defts.' managing director first. Pltf. & the detective went together to the police station, & the foreman afterwards appeared, charged pltf., & signed the charge sheet. The next morning, pltf. having been locked up all night, defts.' managing director gave evidence against pltf., but the charge was dismissed. Upon that, the managing director made a remark impugning the magistrate's decision, for which he was called to order. Pltf. brought this action in a county ct. for false imprisonment; at the end of pltf.'s case the judge refused to nonsuit; & the jury found a verdict of £50 for pltf.:—Held: (1) these facts afforded no evidence that the managing director ratified the foreman's action in the matter; & a nonsuit must be entered; (2) under the circumstances, the managing director had no power to render defts. liable in this action.—ROWE v. LONDON PIANOFORTE CO., LTD. Deft.'s horses, while being driven by his servant in the public highway, ran away, & became so unmanageable that the servant could not stop them, but could, to some extent, guide them. Deft., who sat beside his servant, was requested by him not to interfere with the driving, & complied. While unsuccessfully trying to turn a corner safely, the servant guided them so that, without his intending it, they knocked down & injured pltf., who was in the highway. Pltf. having sued deft. for negligence & in trespass, the jury found that there was no negligence in any one :—Held : even assuming deft. to be as much responsible as his servant, no action was maintainable ; for since the servant had done his best under the circumstances, the act of alleged trespass in giving the horses the direction towards pltf. was not a wrongful act. Qu. : whether if an action would have lain against the servant, it would also have lain against deft.—HOLMES v. MATHER (1875), L. The barman went to fetch the change; but before giving it he observed that the coin was a foreign one, & took it back to pltf.'s friend, who gave him a half-sovereign instead of it, & the barman thereupon gave him the change. Pltf. & his friend then left the house. A person who was acting as manager of the bar in the absence of deft. followed them into the street, & gave them into the custody of a policeman on a charge of attempting to pass bad money. In an action for false imprisonment:—Held: deft. was not liable, for the manager had no implied authority by reason of his position to arrest pltf., inasmuch as his master's property was no longer in any danger & the arrest was made only for the purpose of

The engine was going at the rate directed by the co., & could not be stopped so as to avoid the accident:—Held: the co. were not liable in trespass; if the sheep were wrongdoers, there was no misconduct for which defts. were responsible; if the sheep had escaped through defect of defts.' fences, the sheep were not wrongdoers, & the damage would be consequent on defts.' wrong, & the co. would be liable in an action on the case.

In all cases where a master gives the direction & control over a carriage or animal to a rational agent, the master is only responsible in an action on the case for want of skill or care of the agent.

The arrangement between the proprietor & the driver was that the horse & cab were entrusted by the former to the latter for the day, to be used entirely at the driver's discretion during the day, for the purpose of plying for hire. The driver was to pay 16*s.* for the cab; all that he made above that sum was his perquisite for his labour & any deficiency he had to make good afterwards. There was no particular time fixed for going out or returning with the cab. On the day when the accident occurred the driver was on his way back with the cab to the stables of the proprietor intending to return the cab. When he came to the end of the mews in which the stables were, he went on with the cab to a tobacconist's a little way off & purchased some snuff & on his way back to the stables the accident happened:—Held: the proprietor was liable for the acts of the driver while acting within the scope of the purposes for which the cab was entrusted to him, as a master for the acts of his servant, & the driver was at the time of the accident so acting.

1112. —— Vehicle left contrary to express orders.]—There is no rule of law to prevent a master being liable for negligence of his servant whereby opportunity was given for a third person to commit a wrongful or negligent act immediately producing the damage complained of. Whether the original negligence was an effective cause of the damage is a question of fact in each case.

Deft. employed a man to drive a cart, with instructions not to leave it, & a lad, who had nothing to do with the driving, to go in the cart & deliver parcels to the customers of defts. The driver left the cart, in which the lad was, & went into a house. While the driver was absent the lad drove on & came into collision with pltf.'s carriage. At the trial the judge, upon the authority of Beard v. London General Omnibus Co., No. 1113, ante, held there was no evidence that the conductor had any authority from defts. to drive the omnibus & entered judgment for defts.:—Held: there was evidence of negligence on the part of the driver in allowing the omnibus to be negligently driven by the conductor, & there must therefore be a new trial.—RICKETTS v. TILLING (THOS.), LTD., [1915] 1 K. 1120. Partnership business—Joint liability of masters.]—A. & B. are partners in the business of public carriers; by a contract between them, A. finds horses & drivers for certain stages, & B. supplies them for the remaining stages. They are, notwithstanding this division of the concern between them, responsible for the misconduct & negligence of their drivers & servants throughout the whole distance, & it is no defence to B. that the servant, by whom an injury is committed, was the special servant of A. & hired & paid by A. alone.—WEYLAND v. ELKINS (1816), Holt, N. At the trial, it was left to the jury to say, whether or not the horse was taken by the servant with the implied consent or authority of deft.; & they having found a verdict for pltf., the ct. refused to grant a new trial.—GOODMAN v. KENNELL (1828), 3 C. & P. 167; 1 Moo. & P. 241; 6 L. Deft. & his groom were riding by at a foot pace, meeting the waggon on the wrong side, when just as he passed pltf., the groom touched his horse with a spur, & the horse kicked out & struck pltf.:—Held: the act of using the spur when so near pltf. was such an improper act on the part of the groom as to justify the jury in finding deft. to have been guilty of negligence.—NORTH v. SMITH (1861), 10 C. Pltf. fell out of the cart & was injured through the negligence of the servant in charge of the cart in causing the horse to start. In an action against deft. for damages for the injuries sustained by pltf.:—Held: the existence of an emergency gave no implied authority to the servant to invite pltf. into the cart, & deft. was not liable to pltf.—HOUGHTON v. PILKINGTON, [1912] 3 K. By an agreement with one of their customers one of their cabs was appropriated to his exclusive use. A driver in their employment, by the order of their general manager, whose orders it was the duty of the driver to obey, drove him in that cab upon his private business. The general manager had no authority to use the cab for that purpose, but the driver had no reason to suppose that his order was an improper one. Pltf. was injured by the negligence of the driver while driving the cab:—Held: the driver was acting within the scope of his employment while so driving the cab, & defts. were liable for his negligence.—IRWIN v. WATERLOO TAXI-CAB CO., LTD., [1912] 3 K. 1134. —— ——.]—The owner of a motor garage leased it to a firm of motor engineers, who agreed with defts. to give them the use of it as a garage for motor lorries. A youth employed by defts. in the garage, while drawing motor spirit from a drum into a tin, struck a match, lit a cigarette, & then threw the match on the floor. This set light to some oil & petrol lying about the floor; the fire spread to the motor spirit flowing from the drum, & the garage & its contents were consumed. In an action by the owner & the lessees of the garage against defts. for the negligence of their servant:—Held: the servant being engaged in an act which was within the scope of his employment, & required special caution, & having failed to exercise caution, was guilty of negligence in the course of his employment, & defts. were liable for the resulting damage.—JEFFERSON v. DERBYSHIRE FARMERS, LTD., [1921] 2 K. 1135. By water—Overflow.]—Pltfs. occupied premises beneath the offices of defts., who were solrs. One of defts. had a room of the offices, & in it was a lavatory for his own use exclusively, & his orders to his clerks were that no clerk should come into his room after he had left. A clerk went into the room to wash his hands at the lavatory after his employers had left, turned the water tap, & negligently left it so that the water flowed from it into pltf.'s premises & damaged them. In an action for negligence:—Held: the act of the clerk was not within the scope of his authority, or incident to the ordinary duties of his employment & there was no evidence of negligence for which defts. were liable.—STEVENS v. WOODWARD (1881), 6 Q. 1136. —— ——.]—Defts. sublet to pltfs. the lower rooms of their house, while they retained the upper rooms for carrying on their own business. In these upper rooms there was a lavatory for the use of defts.' clerks, the key of which was kept by defts.' foreman. This foreman, leaving off work at 7 p.m., went at 7.10 p.m. to the lavatory to wash his hands. Turning on the tap, & finding no water, he went away without turning the tap off. When the water was turned on next morning it overflowed, went through the floor, & damaged pltfs.' goods in the room below. The jury found that the damage was caused by the negligence of the clerk in leaving the tap open:—Held: defts. were liable for the damage so caused by the negligence of their clerk, upon the ground that, whether the use of the lavatory by the clerk was or was not within the scope of his authority, it was at all events an incident to his employment, so as to render his employer liable for the damage resulting from his negligence in such use.—RUDDIMAN & CO. v. SMITH (1889), 60 L. Deft.'s servant left his cart & horse standing in a street thronged with children. Pltf., a child of six, or seven years old, was climbing up & down the wheel of the empty cart. Other children drove the horse on, & pltf. was thrown down, & the wheel went over his leg:—Held: on this evidence the judge rightly left it to the jury to say whether there was negligence on the part of deft.'s servant; for if there was the action was maintainable.—LYNCH v. NURDIN (1841), 1 Q. 1139. —— Theft of goods therefrom.]—A manufacturing jeweller hired from a jobmaster a carriage with a horse & driver at an agreed weekly sum for the express purpose of sending his traveller with a stock of jewels to go round to his customers. One day while making his rounds the traveller went into an hotel & left the carriage, with a stock of jewels inside it, in the charge of the driver. Before leaving the carriage the traveller locked the door. The driver then went into a coffee house, leaving the carriage unattended in the street. A thief drove the carriage away & stole the jewels. The jeweller brought an action against the jobmaster to recover the value of the stolen jewels:—Held: it was the duty of deft. to provide a driver who should take ordinary care of the carriage during the temporary absence of the traveller, & the theft of the jewels was the natural & ordinary result of a breach of such duty, so as to make deft. liable for the loss suffered by pltf.—ABRAHAM v. BULLOCK (1902), 86 L. 1140. Improper levy of fine—Appointee of clerk of peace—Liability of sheriff.]—The duty of the sheriff, with respect to the roll of fines sent to him by the clerk of the peace, pursuant to Levy of Fines Act, 1822 (c. 46), is not purely ministerial, & the sheriff is not justified in levying a fine stated in the roll to be unpaid, when the amount has been paid to the sheriff himself before receiving the roll. The duty clerk of the peace is authorised to receive the amount of fines imposed at quarter sessions; & if he receives the money & omits to notify the receipt in the roll, & damage accrues in consequence to the party fined, the latter may maintain an action against the deputy clerk of the peace for negligence.

1141. Misdelivery of package—Neglect of consignor's order.]—Pltf. delivered at a station on defts.' railway a package, addressed "S. & Co., East India Docks, passenger ship Melbourne, Australia," & paid one sum for the carriage to London. By the practice of defts., goods delivered at that station for London are carried by their own line to Birmingham, & thence by the L. & N. W. Ry. to London. Before the package reached London, pltf. gave the clerk at the London station of the L. & N. W. Ry. co. an order, written across the receipt which had been given for the package, to send it to "S. & Co. Bell Wharf, Ratcliffe, London"; which order the clerk promised to obey, saying there was no extra charge. The package was, however, delivered according to the first address, & consequently lost:—Held: defts.' contract was to deliver according to pltf.'s directions; pltf. had a right to countermand his original direction; the clerk was the agent of defts. to carry out their contract, & therefore to receive the countermand; & defts. were liable for the loss consequent on the countermand having been disobeyed.

The power to receive the countermand was part of the contract itself. It was incidental to the employment of the clerk, that he should do all that defts. themselves would have been bound to do in performance of the original contract. Defts. were bound to act on a reasonable countermand; & the clerk was, therefore, their agent to receive it (PLATT, B.).—SCOTHORN v. SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. CO. (1853), 8 Exch. 341; 7 Ry. & Can. 1142. Neglect of statutory duty by servant—Injury not result of neglect.]—The mere neglect by a servant of a duty imposed upon him by statute in his master's business, will not support an action against the master, where the injury is not shown to have resulted from the servant's neglect of the duty.

An Act of Parliament authorised regulations, for any breach of which the master or other person having charge of any vessel, or the owner, if it appeared that he was in fault, was made liable to penalties, & one of these regulations required that a bright light should be exhibited at the mast head. A declaration against an owner, after setting forth these facts, alleged that deft.'s servants, in charge of the vessel, neglected to exhibit the light at the mast head, & that pltf.'s vessel, through the carelessness & neglect of deft.'s servants in not exhibiting such light, ran foul of deft.'s vessel:—Held: bad on demurrer, as not disclosing any injury arising from the negligence of deft.'s servants nor any breach of duty on his part for which he would be liable civilly or criminally.—GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. MORRISON (1853), 13 C. Deft. had never before employed P., & did not in any way interfere with or direct him in doing the job:—Held: the relationship of master & servant was established between deft. & P., so as to render deft. liable for an injury occasioned to pltf., whilst riding on the public road, by reason of the negligent manner in which P. had left the soil of the road over the drain.—SADLER v. HENLOCK (1855), 4 E. & B. 570; 3 C. 1144. —— Open coal shoot.]—Pltf. was injured by falling into a hole in the foot pavement of a street formed by the raising of the plate of a coal shoot belonging to a house. This had been negligently left open by the carter of deft., a coal merchant, who was delivering coal at the house, & did not warn pltf. of the danger:—Held: deft. was properly sued, & was liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of the carman, who was acting as his servant in the delivery of the coals.—WHITELEY v. PEPPER (1877), 2 Q. 1145. Negligent workmanship of servant.]—Deft. engaged the services of S., a thatcher, for a certain period, at weekly wages, for the purpose of hiring him out to do thatching work for his profit. S. having during the period thatched some stacks of wheat, etc., for pltf., for which work deft. claimed & received payment:—Held: deft. was responsible to pltf. for injury to the wheat, etc., occasioned by the negligent manner in which S. did the work.—HOLMES v. ONION (1857), 2 C. B. N. S. 790; 26 L. J. C. P. 261; 22 J. P. 23; 140 E. R. 627.

1146. —— Work by local authority in default of owner.]—The owner of a house was duly required by an urban sanitary authority to make a covered drain from his house emptying into one of the sewers. The owner failed to do the work & the urban authority under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 23, thereupon themselves did it, & their servants negligently undermined the wall of a mill belonging to it:—Held: H. had a right of action against the urban authority for the negligence of their servants.—HALL v. BATLEY CORPN. (1877), 47 L. J. Q. B. 148; 37 L. T. 710; 42 J. P. 151.

1147. Railway clerk acting as porter.]—M. was a cloakroom clerk in defts.' employ, & assisted at the parcels' office; he used to take up parcels for passengers from the cloakroom to the train, when there was no porter there, & that was a regular thing for him to do. A passenger had asked him to take a parcel to the train, which he did, &, as he was running back, he ran against another porter, who in turn came against the ticket collector, & the ticket collector upset pltf.'s wife, causing injuries which resulted in her death. The judge non-suited pltf., holding that there was no evidence to go to the jury of any negligence on the part of defts. or their servants, & that there was no evidence that, at the time of the accident, M. was acting within the scope of his employment. It was agreed at the trial that, if the ct. should be of opinion that the nonsuit was wrong, judgment should be entered for pltf. for £236 & costs:—Held: there was evidence to go to the jury that at the time of the accident M. was acting within the scope of his employment, the nonsuit was wrong, & judgment should be entered for pltf. as agreed.—MILNER v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. CO. (1884), 50 L. T. 367.

1148. Damage to musical instrument—While stored in concert hall.]—A committee hired defts.' concert hall. The memorandum of letting for an evening concert contained no mention of a rehearsal, but a rehearsal was held in the hall on the same afternoon without objection. When it had ended pltf., without request or notice to the hallkeeper, placed his double bass violin safely in a small room attached to the concert hall, but in the way of the gas bracket. The hallkeeper was defts.' servant, & his duties were to prepare & clean the rooms, open & shut the doors & attend to the gas. In order to light the gas in the small room the hallkeeper moved the violin in such a way that it fell & was broken:—Held: there had been no such negligence on the part of the hallkeeper in the discharge of his duty towards defts. as to render them liable to pltf. for the damage to his violin.—NEUWITH v. OVER DARWEN INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (1894), 63 L. 1149. Injury to pupil — While carrying out teacher's orders.]—Pltf., a girl of fourteen years of age, a pupil at a public elementary school, was sent by her teacher to poke the fire & draw out the damper in a room used by the teachers for their own convenience. In the course of obeying this order her pinafore caught fire, & she was burnt & injured. In an action brought by her against the teacher & deft. corpn., who were the local education authority, claiming damages in respect of her injuries, the jury awarded pltf. £300 damages:—Held: the teacher was liable, & the relation of the education authority to the teacher was that of master & servant so that the principle qui facit per alium facit per se, upon which the master is made responsible for the act or omission of his servant, was applicable, & further, the direction given by the teacher to pltf. was not outside the scope of her employment, so that the education authority were responsible for the direction given by her.—SMITH v. MARTIN & KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPN., [1911] 2 K. Therefore, where an education authority, in pursuance of their statutory powers, provided a vehicle to convey certain children, who lived at a distance, to & from their school, & a child who lived nearer to the school, & was not one of those for whom the vehicle was provided, was conveyed in it with the consent of the education authority, &, while getting out of it, fell & was injured in consequence of there being no second person in addition to the driver to help the children to get in & out:—Held: there was evidence of negligence on the part of the education authority, & they were liable for the injury so caused to the child.—SHRIMPTON v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL (1911), 104 L. Repair of gas meter—Child playing with repairing tool.]—An automatic gas meter, leased by defts. to pltf.'s father, having got out of order, pltf.'s nurse, seeing in the street F., who was a gas fittings inspector employed by defts., asked him to mend the meter. After attempting to mend it, F. left his knife lying about open. Pltf., aged four years, picked up the knife & injured his eye:—Held: there was no evidence that F. was negligent, or that he was acting within the scope of his employment.—FORSYTH v. MANCHESTER CORPN. With a view to rendering such ditch more capable of carrying off the drainage from the farm, B. wrongfully went upon pltf.'s land & pared away his side of the ditch, & cut down so much brushwood & underwood on pltf.'s side, as impeded the flow of drainage along the ditch:—Held: the acts so done by B. were not within the scope of his employment; & consequently the local board were not liable for them at the suit of pltf., there being no implied authority from the board to do them.—BOLINGBROKE (LORD) v. SWINDON LOCAL BOARD (1874), L. 1165. —— Tram conductor leaving tram—To punish persons riding in unauthorised manner.]—An action was brought on behalf of pltf., a boy nine years of age, to recover damages from defts. for an assault committed upon him by a tramway conductor in their employment. Defts. were the owners of a horse tramway system, & it was proved at the trial that boys were in the habit of taking advantage of the absence of the conductor on the top of the tram to ride on the step without paying any fares, leaving the tram before the conductor had come down to his platform. Defts.' bye-laws provided that unauthorised persons were not to travel on the steps or platforms of the trams, & also directed the conductor to enforce or prevent the breach of the bye-laws to the best of his ability. Upon the day in question the conductor on coming down from the top of the tram left the car & ran after some boys whom he thought had been riding on the steps of the tram. He caught pltf., who had not in fact been riding on the tram or otherwise offending against the bye-laws, & committed the assault complained of. The act of the conductor was not done for the purpose of preventing pltf. from riding on the tram nor for the purpose of preventing other boys from doing so at that particular time, but for the purpose of punishing either pltf. or other boys who had broken the bye-law, with a view to preventing them from doing so in the future. The learned deputy judge non-suited pltf. upon the ground that there was no evidence that the conductor in assaulting pltf. was acting in the course of his employment & within the scope of his authority:—Held: the decision of the learned deputy judge was right.—RADLEY v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (1913), 109 L. Pursuer tendered the balance due, which G. declined to accept as correct & asked to see the receipts for previous payments, & then left the house. That when he did call again on the same day he accused pursuer of having altered a receipt for 7*s.* 6*d.* from the sum of 4*s.* 6*d.*, for which it had been truly made out, for the purpose of defrauding defenders of the sum of 3*s.*; that the receipt bore no marks of having been altered; that when she denied the charge G. became violent & threatened to lodge information with the police authorities which would result in her being put in gaol for three months for forgery; & that he repeated the slander in the house of a neighbour:—Held: the averments disclosed no ground of action against defenders, for there was nothing on the face of them to show expressly or by implication that the expression of any opinion by G. as to the genuineness of any receipt which might be produced to him for payment of taxes was within the scope of his employment.—GLASGOW CORPN. v. LORIMER, [1911] A. The agreement provided that the band should not, in the music played, infringe any copyright, & should be liable for damages & costs caused by any infringement. There was also a notice posted in the hall that "only such music as may be played without fee or licence is allowed to be played in this hall." On one occasion the band played certain music, the copyright of which belonged to pltfs., without pltfs.' licence; but defts. did not know, & had no reasonable ground for suspecting, that this infringement would take place. In an action by pltfs. for damages & an injunction:—Held: on its true construction, the agreement between defts. & the band constituted the latter the servants of defts., & not independent contractors; the band on the occasion in question were acting in the course of their employment; defts. were liable under Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 2, for the infringement of copyright; & pltfs. were entitled to damages & an injunction.—PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY, LTD. v. MITCHELL & BOOKER (PALAIS DE DANSE), LTD., [1924] 1 K. The libel in question was inserted in the paper by G. without the express authority, consent, or knowledge of defts. The judge having directed a verdict of guilty against defts.:—Held: there must be a new trial, for upon the true construction of Libel Act, 1843 (c. 96), s. 7, the libel was published without defts.' authority, consent, or knowledge, & it was a question for the jury whether the publication arose from any want of due care & caution on their part.

It is an undoubted principle of law in general that a man can only be made criminally responsible for an act which he has committed himself, or through the agency of another, either actually or constructively . . . but it is not, in my opinion, to be inferred that his employer has given him authority to commit crime, because he has employed him in the conduct of his business (COCKBURN, C.J.).—R. v. HOLBROOK (1877), 3 Q. A man is not criminally responsible for the acts of his servants, & if his servants improperly receive into his warehouse articles marked with the broad arrow, without his knowledge, he is not responsible. 1189. Offences in relation to licensed premises—Sale during prohibited hours.]—Eight persons went to a refreshment room at a railway station, which room was attached to & formed part of deft.'s hotel, on Sunday at 11.10 a.m., & six of them had a glass of beer & the other two a glass of sherry each, standing at the counter. Four of the men were residents in the town within half a mile of the station; the other four were strangers. A train was due at 11.13 a.m. The strangers & three of the residents went by the train, & the fourth, who had been to see his son off, returned home. Two of the three residents who went by the train were seen walking in the town between 2 & 3 p.m. of the same day. There was a printed notice hung up in a conspicuous part of the refreshment room intimating that refreshments were supplied during the time of divine service on Sundays only to travellers, & that those who improperly obtained them would subject themselves to penalties; & it was proved that deft. had given directions to his servants to inquire, before supplying any refreshment, whether or not the person asking for it was a traveller.

e. Crown defrauded of custom's

The magistrates found that the four residents were not "travellers," but did not in terms find that deft. knew it; & they convicted him in a penalty.

The ct. quashed the conviction, on the ground that the onus of proving knowledge in deft. rested on the informer; & intimated that, inasmuch as this rule had been so repeatedly laid down by the ct., they would in future, when a conviction was quashed for want of such proof, consider it right to impose costs.—COPLEY v. BURTON (1870), L. 1190. —— Sale at unlicensed place.]—The keeper of a restaurant, carrying on business in premises not licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors, was also a partner in a wine dealer's business carried on upon duly licensed premises in the neighbourhood. A customer, taking a meal in the restaurant, ordered a pint of claret from a waiter & gave him the money for it; the waiter went to the licensed premises, & there bought & paid for a pint bottle of claret which he brought back to the restaurant, where the customer consumed it. Upon the hearing of a summons against the keeper of the restaurant for selling wine without a license, a magistrate found that there had been a sale at the restaurant of the wine by deft.'s waiter to the customer, & convicted deft.:—Held: there was evidence upon which the magistrate might properly hold that the sale was at the restaurant, & the conviction was right.—PASQUIER v. NEALE, [1902] 2 K. 1191. —— ——.]—Applts. were brewers, & by the system in use in connection with their business each of their draymen had a book called an order & delivery book which he took out each day, in which it was his duty to enter, when received, orders for beer, & hand in each evening to applts.' clerk at their office. Each evening the drayman entered on a load ticket the orders for next day's delivery, which would be handed with the order & delivery book to applts.' clerk. From these the loads for the next day's deliveries were made up, & it was the duty of a foreman & certain clerks to see that only a sufficient amount of beer was loaded to satisfy such day's orders. One of applts.' draymen on May 1, 1908, gave in his order & delivery book, which contained the names of three persons, W., L., & F., the order for each being one crate of bottled beer. On May 2, the drayman went out with a horse & van containing crates & bottled beer of applts. None of the goods bore the name of any customer for whom the goods were intended, & there was no appropriation or identifying marks upon any of the bottles or crates. The drayman delivered a crate of F., two bottles to one B., one bottle to L., & one bottle to W. There was no entry in the book of a single bottle as the order of W. & L. The quantities delivered were paid for on delivery, & the money was duly accounted for to applts. at the end of the day. Draymen were warned not to deliver beer unless an order for same had first been taken to the licensed premises. The drayman having been convicted of selling beer without being duly licensed, applts. were subsequently charged, & convicted of aiding & abetting him in the commission of that offence, the justices having come to the conclusion that no sufficient appropriation of the bottles of beer had taken place before they left the licensed premises:—Held: the conviction was right.—STANSFIELD & CO. v. ANDREWS (1909), 100 L. At the time of his doing so he was drunk to the knowledge of the hotel manager. He was shortly afterwards found drunk upon the premises by a constable:—Held: by Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 18, a licensed person may refuse to admit to & may turn out of the premises any person who is drunk, the hotel proprietor was liable to be convicted under sect. 13 of permitting drunkenness upon his premises, he being unable under the circumstances to discharge the onus cast upon him by Licensing Act, 1902 (c. 28), s. 4, of showing that he took all reasonable steps for preventing drunkenness upon the premises.—THOMPSON v. MCKENZIE, [1908] 1 K. 1194. —— —— Sale of liquor at above maximum price.]—Applts., who were brewers, owned a fully licensed public-house, the license being held by their servant, the manager of the premises. The manager resided in the house & received a salary & was supplied by applts. with spirits for the business & with instructions & price lists showing what was to be charged for the spirits. He had to keep books & to render to applts. weekly returns, & applts. received the whole of the profits. The manager was allowed to engage & dismiss suitable barmaids, & it was his duty to instruct them as to their duties. One of the barmaids sold rum in the public bar at a price above the maximum fixed by the Spirits (Prices & Description) Order, 1919, as amended by Order No. 788 of 1919. On an information against applts. for selling spirits at a price exceeding the maximum, the magistrate found that applts. had sold the spirits by their servant or agent & were liable for such sale under the order, & he convicted them:—Held: the fact that applts. were not the holders of the license did not save them from criminal liability, & the conviction was right.—HOLT BREWERY CO., LTD.

When the order was given the machine was properly stopped; but while the boy was still in this space the person in charge of the machine, thinking the boy was clear of the space, started the machine, whereby the boy received injuries from which he died:—Held: as the person in starting the machine was acting under the belief that the boy was clear of the space, the boy was not allowed by him to be in the prohibited space at the time of the accident, within the meaning of above Act, sub-sects. 2, 3, & the employers, the occupiers of the factory, were not liable in consequence thereof to a fine under Factory & Workshop Act, 1878 (c. 16), s. 83, though such occupiers would have been liable for an allowance by their servant.—CRABTREE v. FERN SPINNING CO., LTD. 1199. Possession of false measures—Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25.]—Applts. owned oil depots, from which a number of tank-waggons were sent out in charge of drivers, each driver being supplied with two five-gallon measures for the purpose of measuring oil sold & delivered to applts.' customers from the tankwaggon.

At all the depots an engineer was employed to examine all measures used by the tankwaggon drivers, & if a measure was found in any way faulty or unjust, its use was at once discontinued, it was put into a separate part of applts.' premises, & a new measure without any defects issued in its place. In the ordinary course of business measures withdrawn from use were attended to & their faults or defects rectified. On Mar. 15, 1907, two measures were supplied to one of applts.' drivers for use during that day. Each measure was examined by applts.' engineer & found to be absolutely correct. Measures set aside for repair were accessible to the driver. Resp., an inspector of weights & measures, found the driver in Bermondsey on that day in charge of a tankwaggon belonging to applts. containing oil, & having in his possession two five-gallon measures, one of which was correct, but the other was found to have in the angle formed by the side & bottom thereof, & at the bottom of the measure itself, a quantity of soap, the effect of which was to render it false & unjust to the extent of three & a half pints. The unjust measure belonged to applts. One of the correct measures supplied by applts. to the driver on the morning of Mar. 15, 1907, could not be traced. The quantity of oil contained in the tankwaggon was measured & booked out against the driver every morning, & similarly checked on his return in the evening of the same day; & the driver did not, either on Mar. 15, 1907, or any previous day, bring back in his tankwaggon more oil than his deliveries during the day accounted for. It was not proved that applts. were cognisant of the driver's conduct, or that they gave their sanction or approval to the use by him of the unjust measure.

On an information preferred by resp. against applts. for that they on Mar. 15, 1907, did, whilst hawking oil from a van in Bermondsey, unlawfully have in their possession for use for trade a false or unjust measure contrary to above sect.:—Held: the ct. was at liberty so far to apply the principle which is well settled in reference to civil liability for torts, that an employer is not liable for fraudulent acts of his servant when committed not in the interest of the employer, but for the individual purposes of profit of the fraudulent servant, as to say that as the fraudulent driver had the fraudulent measure in his own physical possession for his own fraudulent purposes as distinguished from the interests of his employers, his possession must be deemed to be his own possession, & not the possession of his employers, &, therefore, the offence with which applts. were charged had not been made out.—ANGLO-AMERICAN OIL CO., LTD. v. MANNING, [1908] 1 K. They had in pursuance of above Act, sect. 1 (2), fixed & specified by notice in the bookstall in the prescribed form a certain day of the week on which the clerk was not employed after 1.30 p.m. It made no pecuniary difference to him whether he took the weekly half holiday or not. In a certain week in disobedience to his orders he took no weekly half holiday & persisted in working in the bookstall after 1.30 p.m. on the day specified. On an information laid against the alleged occupiers:—Held: assuming the bookstall to be a shop, then an offence had been committed under above Act, sect. 1 (2), & the proper course for the occupiers was to lay an information against the clerk & bring him before the ct. under above Act, sect. 14 (3).—WARD v. SMITH (W. 1201. Taking water without permit—Breach of Water Works Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), s. 59.]—Applt.'s servant, who was driving a steam wagon belonging to applt., drew water for the wagon in the course of his employment from a street hydrant communicating with a water-main belonging to a city corpn., who were the undertakers under above Act, which was in force in the city. Applt., who was a carrier, had not agreed to be supplied with water by the undertakers, whose practice was to grant annual permits to take water for steam wagons on payment, each permit being attached to a particular wagon & being available for any employee of the owner of the wagon. Applt. was summoned for unlawfully taking water for the wagon, contrary to above sect. The justices convicted applt. on the ground that he was liable for the act of his servant:—Held: as the act of applt.'s servant was done within the scope of the servant's employment, applt. was criminally liable under above sect. in respect thereof.—BURNS v. SCHOLFIELD (1922), 128 L. 1203. Whether liable—Trustees acting gratuitously.]—An action on the case will not lie against comrs. appointed under Acts of Parliament, who act gratuitously for the benefit of the public, for injuries occasioned by the neglect of workmen in their employ; nor where by local Acts, actions against such comrs. are directed to be brought against their clerk, will such action lie against him, he not being personally a party to the cause of such injury. The remedy of the party injured is against the agents by whose negligence the injury was occasioned. Thus in an action against the clerks of the comrs. acting under a local Act for paving & lighting the town of Birmingham, & their surveyor & workmen the ct. permitted a verdict found for pltfs., to stand against two of defts.; but held clearly that it could not be sustained against the clerks of the comrs.—HALL v. SMITH (1824), 2 Bing. 156; 9 Moore, C. 1207. —— —— Act complained of not in breach of duty imposed.]—Defts. were an unpaid body of trustees created by statute conservators of the Lee, an ancient navigable river, & were "authorised & empowered from time to time at their discretion to cleanse, scour, deepen, enlarge or straighten the channel or course of the said river, & also to set out, open, make & maintain" certain new cuts or canals thereinafter specified, to communicate with the river & to be used for the navigation, " & also to remove all obstructions & impediments whatsoever to the said navigation." Defts. were also by statute empowered to levy rates or tolls for the use of certain locks & artificial cuts, but were expressly forbidden to receive any toll in respect of such part of the navigation as was between Bow Creek & Old Ford Lock, which part of the navigation was an ancient highway, & was by statute declared to be for ever free from toll. Pltfs.' barge, while navigating a part of the river between Bow Creek & Old Ford Lock, struck upon one of several submerged piles & was injured. Pltfs. having brought an action for damages, the jury found that the piles were dangerous; that defts. ought to have been aware of the danger, & had neglected their duty:—Held: the action could not be maintained, since defts. were unpaid trustees appointed for public purposes in aid of the common law right of navigating an ancient highway, & the duty of removing obstructions imposed by the statute was discretionary & not compulsory.—FORBES v. LEE CONSERVANCY BOARD (1879), 4 Ex. 1208. —— Trustees having no knowledge of wrongful act.]—By a local Act certain trustees were appointed for carrying out the Act. The trustees acted gratuitously; the property in the harbour was vested in them, & they were empowered to elect a harbour master, & other officers & servants connected with the harbour, with power also to discharge them. The harbour master was empowered to direct the situation in which a vessel entering the harbour was to be moored. The trustees were also empowered to make bye-laws as to the management of the harbour, & to impose tonnage rates upon vessels using it, & borrow money on such rates, & to apply the proceeds in payment of the interest of the money borrowed, & of the costs & expenses attending the carrying into execution the purposes of the Act connected with the harbour, & also in the reduction of the capital borrowed:—Held: the trustees were not liable, either for the acts of the harbour master in directing a vessel to be moored in an improper place, whereby it received damage, or, for an injury occasioned to a vessel by an accumulation of rubbish in the harbour.—METCALFE v. HETHERINGTON (1855), 11 Exch. 257; 24 L. 1209. —— ——.]—A local Act for better preserving the harbour of Maryport, & for lighting & otherwise improving the township of Maryport, sect. 7, appoints trustees to carry the Act into execution. By sect. 21, they may elect a harbour master, who, by sect. 47, may direct any person having the command of any vessel entering into or being within the harbour to anchor & place the same in such situation within the harbour as he shall direct. After the passing of the Act some coals were shot into a berth in the harbour which rendered it dangerous. The trustees at a board meeting having had notice of the state of the berth, gave directions to their clerk to have the coals removed, & the coals were accordingly partly, but not sufficiently removed at their expense. After this, the harbour master, without the knowledge of the trustees, directed pltf. to place his vessel in the berth. He did so, & the vessel while lying there sustained damage in consequence of the berth being unsafe. The harbour master knew that the berth had been unsafe, & what had been done to it, but neither he nor the trustees knew that the berth continued unsafe when he directed pltf. to place his vessel in it.—Held: there was no evidence to warrant a verdict against the trustees.—METCALFE v. HETHERINGTON (1860), 5 H. & N. 719; 2 L. 1211. Liability of trustee—For felonious acts of servant—Trustee for remuneration.]—A trustee for remuneration is not, in the absence of negligence on his part, liable for losses of the trust property sustained through the felonious acts of his servant, but is, in this respect, upon the same footing as an unpaid trustee.

Deft., who was the paid trustee of a creditors' trust deed, employed L. to manage & deal with part of the trust property. The employment of L. was justifiable, & deft. was not guilty of any negligence in the matter, but certain chattels comprised in the trust estate having been stolen by L., & their value having thus been lost, it was sought to make deft. liable:—Held: no liability attached to deft.—JOBSON v. PALMER, [1893] 1 Ch. 71; 62 L. 1212. —— In contract—Servant acting with authority.]—Where trustees who are carrying on a business permit one of their number to go into the market & purchase the goods required for carrying on the business, the trustee who is armed with authority to purchase the goods for the purpose of carrying on the business is also armed with authority to pledge the credit of the other trustees for that purpose.

Defts., mother & son, as trustees under a will, were joint owners of a business which, by the trusts of the will, was carried on by the mother as agent for the trustees. The mother employed the son to purchase goods for the purposes of the business, which were paid for by the son, at the time of purchase by cheques bearing the signatures of the mother & son as drawers. In an action for the price of goods sold & delivered by a person who on previous occasions had received these cheques in payment:—Held: there was evidence that the son was held out by the mother as having authority to pledge their joint credit.—BRAZIER v. CAMP (1894), 63 L. The adjoining owner then claimed to be entitled to be paid direct out of testator's estate the amount so recovered:—Held: as the injury had been occasioned by the trustee in the reasonable management & working of his testator's estate, he was entitled to be indemnified out of the assets, &, consequently, the adjoining owner was entitled to stand in the place of the trustee & to claim the benefit of this right to indemnity so as to obtain payment of the damages & costs so recovered direct out of testator's estate.—Re RAYBOULD, RAYBOULD v. TURNER, [1900] 1 Ch. 199; 69 L. The ship Gundreda was chartered by the owner to G. for a cargo from London to Port Louis & back. The cargo was to be taken in at the charterer's expense. The stevedore for outward cargo was to be appointed by the charterer, but to be paid by & act under the orders of the captain. 1226. ——.]—Where a person employs another to do a lawful act, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he employs him to do it in a careful & proper manner; & unless the relation of master & servant exists between them, the employer is not responsible for the negligent manner in which the act is done.

Therefore, where pltf. & deft. were owners of adjoining ancient houses, & an architect employed by deft. to superintend the repairs of his house, having considered it necessary to pull down & rebuild the front wall, agreed with a contractor to do the work for an estimated price, & the workmen of the contractor in pulling down the wall removed a brest-summer which was inserted in the party wall between deft.'s & pltf.'s house, without taking any precautions by shoring or otherwise, in consequence of which the front wall of pltf.'s house fell:—Held: there was no evidence for the jury of any liability on the part of deft.—BUTLER v. HUNTER

The action was against the lessees of the Victoria Docks, who admitted that they were the proper parties to be sued in respect of claims arising in the working of the docks.

A ship was being discharged of a cargo of sulphur, which was received into lighters of pltf. through the "shoot" referred to, which was erected by the men who actually did the work. Defts. were paid by the merchant for discharging his ship; & the case for pltf. was, that it was to be inferred from this fact that the men who did the work & erected the "shoot" were in the employ of defts.:—Held: this was not a legitimate inference, whether of law or fact; & the above fact was not sufficient evidence to support it, for the work might have been done by the men under some sub-contract.—WOODWARD v. PETO (1862), 3 F. & F. 389.

A son of pltf. was treated in the hospital while suffering from a mild attack of scarlet fever, & was ultimately discharged by the visiting physician while still in an infectious condition, & under circumstances which a jury found to amount to a want of reasonable skill & care on his part in & about the discharge; after the boy had returned home, he communicated the disease to three other children of pltf. Pltf. then sued defts. to recover the expense to which he had been put in regard to the illness of his other children owing to the premature discharge of his son from the hospital by the visiting physician:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, for the legal obligation of defts. extended only to the provision of reasonably skilled & competent medical attendance for the patients, which they had discharged, & there was no absolute undertaking or obligation on their part that no patient should be discharged by the visiting physician while still in a condition which might cause infection.—EVANS v. LIVERPOOL CORPN., [1906] 1 K. 1240. ——.]—The only duty undertaken by the governors of a public hospital towards a patient who is treated in the hospital is to use due care & skill in selecting their medical & nursing staff. The physicians & surgeons who give their services at the hospital are employed to exercise their profession to the best of their abilities, according to their own discretion, but in exercising it they are in no way under the orders, or bound to obey the directions, of the governors. Although the nurses employed at the hospital are servants of the governors for general purposes, they are not so for the purposes of operations conducted by the medical staff. Pltf. sued defts. to recover damages for injuries which he alleged he had sustained through the negligent conduct of an operation at the hospital. The operation was conducted by a consulting surgeon who was attached to the hospital but was not under the control of defts. During the operation he was assisted by members of the surgical & nursing staff:—Held: the action was not maintainable against defts.—HILLYER v. ST. The beer, at the request of the occupier of the licensed premises, was delivered by the carman into the cellar, the flaps of which were turned back by the carman. Pltf., who was passing along the pavement, was tripped by the flaps & fell into the cellar, & was injured:—Held: the brewery co. were not liable to pltf., as they had not employed the contractor to do work on the highway which was dangerous to the public, nor to interfere with the surface of the highway, & therefore they were not liable for the negligent acts of the contractor.—WILSON v. HODGSON'S KINGSTON BREWERY CO. While one of these casements was being put in, an iron tool was placed by a servant of the sub-contractor on the window sill; & the casement having been blown to by the wind, the tool fell & struck pltf., who was passing along the street. The tool was not placed on the window sill in the normal course of doing the work which the sub-contractors were employed to do. Pltf. sued defts. claiming damages in respect of his injuries:—Held: the injuries were caused to pltf. by an act of collateral negligence on the part of a workman who was a servant of the sub-contractors & not of defts., & the latter were therefore not liable for the consequences of that negligence.—PADBURY v. HOLLIDAY & GREENWOOD, LTD. The firm, without the knowledge of applts., wrongfully entered upon resps.' lands, cut pine trees thereon, manufactured ties, & proceeded to deliver them according to their contract. When ordered by the Crown Timber Agent to desist, they had removed all but a few of the ties. Later, the Crown gave permission to applts. to remove the remaining ties, & subsequently charged them the usual dues in respect of all timber cut by the firm, including the pine trees cut upon resps.' lands. By a resolution of the committee of management for the highways, appointed by the vestry, it was ordered that about 150 yards of a road should be raised, & deft., as surveyor, was directed to carry out the resolution. Deft. contracted with G. to do the labour at 3½*d.* per yard, the vestry finding stones & materials. G. worked himself, & employed & paid his own men, & deft., as surveyor, employed men to cart materials to the ground. Deft. set the work out, & determined the levels, but had nothing to do with the paving himself, except superintending on behalf of the committee. The work was carried out by raising one-half of the width of the road about a foot, leaving the other half at its old level; & a considerable length of road was so left without light or fencing at night; &, in consequence of this, the dogcart of pltf., which he was driving along the road, was upset & he was injured. Defts. employed a contractor to build the bridge in conformity with the Act. While the bridge was unfinished & in the hands of the contractor, from some defect in the machinery it could not be opened, & pltf.'s vessels were thereby prevented from navigating the river:—Held: defts. were liable.

Where the mischief arises directly from the act ordered to be done, there the person giving the order is responsible; but where it arises from something collateral & incidental to the act ordered to be done, he is not responsible. Where a person employs another to do an act which the employer has a right to do, it is the duty of the employer to see that the act is properly done; & he will therefore be responsible for any mischief arising from the improper performance of the act by the person employed.—HOLE v. SITTINGBOURNE & SHEERNESS RY. 1264. Delivery of coal to railway refreshment rooms—Cellar opening on platform.]—Refreshment rooms & a coal cellar at a railway station were let by the co. to one S., the opening for putting coals into the cellar being on the arrival platform. A train coming in whilst the servants of a coal merchant were shooting coals into the cellar for S., pltf., a passenger, whilst passing, as the jury found, in the usual way out of the station, without any fault of his own, fell into the cellar opening, which the coal merchants had negligently left insufficiently guarded:—Held: S., the occupier of the refreshment rooms & cellar, was responsible for this negligence, &, Semble: the railway co. also would be liable, but not the coal merchant.

1265. Removing grain from brewery.]—During the removal of refuse grains from a brewery, in pursuance of a contract, & under the superintendence of the foreman of the brewers, so far as the removal inside the brewery was concerned, some of the grains were spilt upon the footpath in front of the brewery. Pltf., while passing the brewery, slipped upon the grains & fell, & sustained injuries. In an action for damages against the brewers:—Held: it was no answer on their part to say that the accident arose through the negligence of the contractors' men.—DUKE v. COURAGE & Co. (1882), 46 J. P. 453.

1266. Fire spreading to adjoining land—Contractor disregarding stipulations in contract.]—Held: deft. co. was liable in damages for the act of its contractor in negligently & improperly lighting a fire on its land, & permitting it to spread to pltf.'s lands; even though such contractor in so doing disregarded special stipulations contained in such contract relative to the time at which such fire should be lit.

To escape liability deft. must show that the act of the contractor was that of a trespasser, & was not within the scope of his contract.—BLACK v. CHRISTCHURCH FINANCE Co., [1894] A. C. 48; 63 L. J. P. C. 32; 70 L. T. 77; 58 J. P. 332; 6 R. 394, P. C.

1267. Removal of wreck sunk in navigable river.]—The owner of a vessel sunk in the fairway of a navigable river so as to be a danger to other vessels, who retains the possession, management & control of the wreck, is under an obligation to take reasonable care to warn other vessels of its position, & is liable for damage to another vessel, occasioned by the neglect to give proper warning, though such neglect was that of an independent contractor employed by him.—THE SNARK, [1900] P. 105; 69 L. 1268. Driving cow & calf on highway.]—Deft. through an agent bought a cow & calf, & by deft.'s instructions the agent employed a drover to drive them to deft.'s farm. The drover got another man, who was about to drive bullocks in same direction, to drive the cow & calf along with them. On the way the cow tossed a dog & afterwards tossed pltf., who suffered injury thereby. In an action for negligence there was evidence that a cow with a calf might become dangerous if it met a dog, & the judge found that the drover was negligent as it was his duty to see that the cow was under control, that deft. was negligent in employing one man to perform a dangerous operation for which his powers were inadequate, that even if the drover was an independent contractor this was no defence, & awarded pltf. damages:—Held: there was evidence to support the findings of negligence & the judge was entitled to hold that the drover was employed to do a dangerous thing on a highway, & therefore, even if the drover was an independent contractor, deft. was liable.—PINN v. REW (1916), 32 T. 1269. Deposit of materials on highway.]—B., the owner & occupier of premises adjoining the highway, employed C. to make a drain therefrom to communicate with the common sewer. In the performance of this work, the workmen employed by C. placed gravel on the highway; in consequence of which A., in driving along the road, sustained personal injury. Before the accident the dangerous position of the heap was pointed out to B., who promised to remove it. C. had the sole management of the work, & employed & paid D. to cart away part of the rubbish, at a certain price per load, & had charged A. in his bill with the sum so paid:—Held: B. was liable to A., in case.—BURGESS v. GRAY (1845), 1 C. 1271. ——.]—Defts., a telephone co., were lawfully engaged in laying telephone wires along a street. They passed the wires through tubes which they laid in a trench under the level of the pavement. Defts. contracted with a plumber to connect these tubes at the joints with lead & solder to the satisfaction of defts.' foreman at the sum of 12*s.* per joint. There was evidence that the work was done by the plumber under the supervision of defts.' foreman, & that one of their men was assisting him in it. Pltf. who was passing on the highway was splashed by molten solder & thereby injured:—Held: there was evidence that defts. & the plumber were jointly engaged in the performance of the work under such circumstances as to render defts. liable for the negligence of which the plumber had been guilty; & even if the plumber were an independent contractor, defts., having authorised the performance upon a highway of work, which from its nature was likely to involve danger to persons using the highway, were bound to take care that those who executed the work for them did not negligently cause injury to such persons.—HOLLIDAY v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., [1899] 2 Q. 1272. Erection of standards for tramways.]—A town council, owners of tramways, entered into a contract with a contractor whereby the latter undertook to do the whole of the work of equipping the tramways for electric traction. The contractor entered into a sub-contract whereby the sub-contractor agreed to do part of the work, namely, the erection of the iron standards along the streets & the fixing of the wires thereto. For this purpose the sub-contractor used a tall derrick, which was a usual structure to employ in executing work of this kind, & his workmen, on leaving off work, negligently left the derrick too close to the tramlines, whereby pltf., who was riding on a tramcar, was injured. In an action against the contractor to recover damages:—Held: as the work was being done on a highway, it was the contractor's duty to take reasonable precautions to protect the public, & he could not escape from that duty by delegating the work to a sub-contractor; the act of negligence was not merely casual or collateral; & defts. were liable.—MAXWELL v. BRITISH THOMSON-HOUSTON CO., LTD., BLACKWELL & CO., THIRD PARTIES (1902), 18 T. 1274. Lamp overhanging street.]—Deft. became the lessee & occupier of a house, from the front of which a heavy lamp projected several feet over the public foot-pavement. As pltf. was walking along, in Nov., the lamp fell on her & injured her. It appeared in evidence that in the previous Aug. deft. employed an experienced gasfitter, C., to put this lamp, etc., in repair. At the time of the accident a person employed by deft. was blowing the water out of the gas-pipes of the lamp, & in doing this a ladder was raised against the lamp-iron or bracket from which the lamp hung, & on the man mounting the ladder, owing to the wind & wet, the ladder slipped, & he, to save himself, clung to the lamp-iron, & the shaking caused the lamp to fall. On examination it turned out that the fastening by which the lamp was attached to the lamp-iron was in a decayed state. The jury found that there had been negligence on the part of C., but no negligence on the part of deft. personally; that the lamp was out of repair, through general decay; but not to the knowledge of deft.; that the immediate cause of the fall of the lamp was the slipping of the ladder; but that, if the lamp had been in good repair, the slipping of the ladder would not have caused it to fall:—Held: pltf. was entitled to the verdict. If a person maintains a lamp projecting over the highway for his own purposes it is his duty to maintain it so as not to be dangerous to the passengers; & if it causes injury owing to want of repair, it is no answer on his part that he had employed a competent person to repair it. Under the circumstances of the case, it was shown that deft. knew 1275. Adjoining buildings—Interference with right to support.]—A man, who orders a work to be executed on his own premises, lawful in itself, but from which, in the natural course of things, injurious consequences to his neighbour must be expected to arise unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief; & cannot relieve himself of his responsibility by employing some one else to do what is necessary to prevent the act he had ordered to be done from becoming wrongful.

Pltf. & deft. were respective owners of two adjoining houses, pltf. being entitled to the support, for his house, of deft.'s soil. Deft. employed a contractor to pull down his house, excavate the foundations & rebuild the house; the contractor undertook the risk of supporting pltf.'s house, as far as might be necessary, during the work, & to make good any damage & satisfy any claims arising therefrom. Pltf.'s house was injured in the progress of the work owing to the means taken by the contractor to support it being insufficient:—Held: on the above principle, deft. was liable even if the undertaking as to risk, etc., had amounted, which it did not, to an express stipulation that the contractor should do as part of the works contracted for, all that was necessary to support pltf.'s house.—BOWER v. PEATE (1876), 1 Q. 1276. —— ——.]—One of the two adjoining houses having been, twenty-seven years before the accident, altered internally by pltfs., the owners, so as to rest chiefly on a pillar built on the edge of their land, & contiguous to the land on which the adjoining house of defts. stood, fell down in consequence of excavations made by defts. on the site of their house which they had pulled down, & by reason of the pillar being deprived of the lateral support previously afforded by the soil under the surface of the adjoining land of defts. In an action by pltfs. to recover damages for the loss caused by the fall of their house, the judge at the trial directed a verdict for pltfs.:—Held: where a principal has employed a contractor to do work which is in its nature dangerous to adjoining property, the employer is bound to see that proper means are adopted to prevent injurious consequences, & cannot discharge himself of his liability by employing a competent contractor & directing him to use proper precautions.—ANGUS v. DALTON (1878), 4 Q. 1278. Demolition of upper part of building—Damage to ground floor tenant.]—Pltf. was the tenant of a shop on the ground floor of a large building belonging to defts. For their own purposes defts. demolished the premises above pltf.'s shop, employing an independent contractor to execute the work. In the course of the demolition of defts.' premises damage was done to pltf.'s premises & goods. In an action in the county ct. against defts. to recover damages for the nuisance, the judge found that defts. had not taken all the precautions they might have taken to prevent the mischief, & gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: although defts. had employed an independent contractor to do the work, yet, as the work was of a character from which in the natural course of things injurious consequences must be expected to arise unless preventive means were adopted, there remained a duty upon defts. to see that such measures were adopted, &, the judge having found upon the evidence before him that defts. had not taken all the precautions possible, they were not exonerated from liability by employing an independent contractor.—ODELL v. CLEVELAND HOUSE, LTD. 1279. General rule.] — Where a statutory obligation is imposed on a person, he is liable for any injury that arises to others in consequence of its having been negligently performed, & this whether it were performed by himself or by a contractor employed by him.

A. was empowered under Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), ss. 77, 110, 111, to make a drain from his premises to a sewer, by cutting a trench across a highway, & filling it up after the drain should be completed. 1280. Taking lands for public works.] — A corpn. having, under an Act of Parliament, right to take lands for the purpose of certain public works, gave notice to the owner of the inheritance of an intention to take it. They then entered regularly upon the land for the purpose of surveys, etc., & afterwards their contractors, without the knowledge of the corpn., but with the assent of the occupying tenants brought some waggons & rails & other implements on the land & there left them, but did not commence the works or do any damage. This was done without obtaining the assent of pltf., but it became known to his agent in the end of Dec. In the beginning of the following Feb. without any previous communication with defts. he filed his bill for an injunction to restrain them from allowing the waggons, etc., to remain on the land & from taking possession of the land until they had complied with the provisions of Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18):—Held: though the corpn. were bound by the acts of their contractors, the acts done were not a taking possession within the meaning of the Act & the bill was improperly filed.—STANDISH v. LIVERPOOL CORPN. The filling in of the road had been properly done by deft., & the hole was owing to the natural subsidence of the materials, which sometimes takes place, to a greater or less degree, six months or longer after such an excavation has been filled in:—Held: deft. was not liable to pltf. for the damage: for there was no obligation on the deft. by common law or statute to do more than properly reinstate the road.—HYAMS v. WEBSTER (1868), L. That power is conferred by Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 104), s. 2, subject, by sect. 27, to the consent of the Admlty. being previously obtained in respect of all works below high water mark which may interfere with the navigation. A railway co. used certain roads by the carriage of stone, bricks, timber & other materials over the same, to be used, & which were actually used, in the making of the railway & works. In the opinion of two justices, they had thereby done damage to such roads:—Held: under the above provision they were liable to make good the damage so done, although the materials were really conveyed in the carts of the contractors, or sub-contractors, or of other persons employed by them.—WEST RIDING & GRIMSBY RY. stone. The contractor used traction engines to haul the stone, & in so doing caused damage to some other roads, which were repairable by the county council as the highway authority. The contract was for a year, commencing on Apr. 1, 1902, & terminating on Mar. 31, 1903. The damage to the roads took place between Jan. 19 & Mar. 24, 1903. The work of widening the road was completed in Sept. 1903. On Feb. 11, 1904, the county council commenced an action against the corpn. to recover the additional expenses of repairing pltfs.' roads in consequence of the use of the traction engines:—Held: the action could be maintained against the corpn. as the persons in consequence of whose order the damage had been done.—KENT COUNTY COUNCIL v. FOLKESTONE CORPN., [1905] 1 K. 1290. Non-repair of roadway.]—Defts. were the owners of a quay over which there was a public right of way to their docks. The Great Eastern Ry. co., by their private Act of Parliament, were empowered to & did enter into an arrangement with defts. to lay tramways connecting the docks with the railway system. The co. were to keep the tramways in good working order. Under Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), the co. as promoters gave notice to defts. of their intention to open & break up the road for the purpose of doubling the rails at a particular point. The co. did break up the highway for their tramway purposes. Pltf. was injured by being thrown from his cart through the defective condition of the roadway at the place where the works were being carried out, & brought his action for compensation against defts. as owners of the highway. The jury at the trial found that the accident to pltf. had been caused by the negligence of the railway co., who were in possession of the spot where the occurrence took place, & that the roadway was in a defective condition owing to a breach of duty on the part of the railway co., & gave pltf. substantial damages. It was contended, on argument on behalf of pltf., that on these findings he was entitled to have the verdict entered for him, & on the part of defts. that they amounted to a verdict for them:—Held: as the railway co. were carrying out their works not under the orders or as licensees of defts., but under their statutory powers, & were in the sole possession of the place where the accident happened, which was entirely under their control, & the negligence causing the accident was that of the railway co. & not of defts., the verdict ought to be entered for defts.—BARHAM v. IPSWICH DOCK COMRS. 1291. Disposal of sewage.]—The Beaconsfield Rural District Council had undertaken, under powers given to them by Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), the cleansing of cesspools in part of their district. They entered into a contract with H. that he should keep the cesspools clear. The contract did not contain any express provision as to disposal of the sewage matter emptied out of the cesspools. H.'s men had without leave deposited the sewage on the land of pltfs., who brought an action against the council & H. for damages:—Held: the council had a duty to dispose of the sewage, & on the construction of the special contract they had not contracted with H. for the discharge of this duty & were still liable for it not being discharged; (2) even if they had contracted for the discharge of this duty they would have remained liable to pltfs., for the contractor's failure to perform the duty.—ROBINSON v. BEACONSFIELD RURAL COUNCIL, [1911] 2 Ch. 188; 80 L. SUB-SECT. 1.—INDUCING SERVANT TO LEAVE SERVICE.

A. In General.

See, generally, TRADE & TRADE UNIONS.

1299. What is evidence of inducing.]—In an action against A. for seducing the servant of B. from his service, it is sufficient evidence that A. asked the servant to enlist in the army & afterwards gave him money. An infant slave in the West Indies executed an indenture, by which he covenanted to serve B. for a certain term of years as his servant, & B. covenanted to do certain things on his part: B. then came to England with the slave. In an action against A. who had seduced him from the service of B., A. was not permitted to allege that the contract was void, as being made by an infant & a slave, & therefore that the declaration, which stated him to have been retained as a servant for a term of years, was not proved; for the ct. held that the effect of such a contract might be the manumission of the slave, & consequently that it was for his own benefit, & being for his own benefit, that it was, at most, only voidable by the infant himself.—KEANE v. BOYCOTT (1795), 2 Hy. The third count alleged that J. had been hired by pltf. as & was his dramatic artiste, for a certain term, & that deft. had maliciously enticed & procured her to depart from her said employment during the said term. All the counts alleged special damage. On a demurrer to the declaration:—Held: the action was maintainable at common law, as the maliciously procuring J. to break her contract was a wrongful act from which damage accrued to pltf.; the rule of law giving a remedy for enticing away servants, is not confined to menial servants, or to such as fall within the Statute of Labourers, but extends to all cases where there is an unlawful or malicious enticing away of a person employed to give his exclusive personal service for a given time under the direction of an employer who is injured by the wrongful act; & the action for maliciously persuading a servant to quit his service is maintainable wherever there is at the time of the persuading a binding contract of hiring & service existing between the parties, whether the service be then actually subsisting or not.

Semble: the contract need not be for exclusive service; & an action will lie for maliciously inducing another to break a contract of any description whereby damage accrues to the party with whom the contract has been made.—LUMLEY v. GYE (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L. 1308. ——.]—A number of discharged sailors entered into a partnership according to the terms of which the sailors were to perform together at certain music halls & were not to appear during the term of the partnership in any other theatre or music hall. Pltfs., who were members of the co., complained that deft. had induced certain of the sailors to break the contract by promising to get them employment & by obtaining other engagements for them. By amendment it was further alleged that deft. had wrongfully continued persons in her employment with the knowledge that by being in her employment those persons were breaking a contract with pltfs.:—Held: assuming an action lies to recover damages on the latter ground, the foundation of this action is that there shall be notice to deft. of a subsisting contract which one party, at all events, is still willing & able to perform; & there being sufficient evidence before the county ct. judge that the partnership had for all practical purposes come to an end, no action lay.—LONG v. SMITHSON (1918), 88 L. Where in such an action the employed was also a defendant, but as against him pltf. claimed only an injunction & not damages:—Held: damages might, in the discretion of the ct. be given under Chancery Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 27), & the jury, therefore, should be directed by the judge, in the event of a verdict for pltf., to find such damages as should be awarded (a) if the ct. should think it a proper case both for injunction & damages, & (b) if the ct. should think it a proper case for damages only, & not also for an injunction.—BOWEN v. HALL (1881), 6 Q. By means of a fictitious letter of invitation dictated by deft., she procured her mother's consent to her quitting her home for a few days, when she left, & deft. took her to a lodging house, where he cohabited with her for nine days, & she then returned home:—Held: there was a sufficient continuing relation of master & servant de facto, & sufficient evidence of a wrongful enticing away of the daughter by deft. to entitle pltf. to maintain an action against him.—EVANS v. WALTON (1867), L. 1336. Inducing servant to execute commissions—Where contract for exclusive service.]—Resps. employed D. as their agent to buy tobacco from growers, the total bought not to exceed 300,000 lbs., & supplied him with forms of contract bearing their firm name as buyers. D. agreed not to act as buying agent for anybody except resps. & another firm. Applt., who knew the position as between D. & resps., induced him to buy in the names of the two firms a total of 1,100,000 lbs., arranging with him to take over the surplus not required for them. Out of that total weight D. handed 300,000 lbs. to resps., & tendered the balance to applt. ; but he repudiated the arrangement, the market having fallen heavily. Resps. having also repudiated liability, one of the vendors, with whom D. had contracted upon resp.'s form, was held to be entitled to damages from resps. as having held out D. as their agent ; resps. claimed to recover over from applt. :—Held : resps. were so entitled, applt. having knowingly induced D. to commit a breach of his duty to them, whereby they had suffered the damage.—JASPERSON v. DOMINION TOBACCO Co., [1923] A. 1359. —— —— Weekly leave of absence.]—Pltf.'s daughter, who was in the service of deft., was permitted to go out once a week for an afternoon & evening. On such occasions she went to her father's house & assisted in household duties. In an action by pltf. for the seduction of his daughter by deft. while she was in the latter's service:—Held: there was no evidence of the relation of master & servant between pltf. & his daughter to support the action.—WHITBOURNE v. WILLIAMS, [1901] 2 K. B. 722; 70 L. J. K. B. 933; 85 L. T. 271; 17 T. L. R. 707, C. A.

1360. Part service at home—Employment during the day.]—In an action for debauching & carnally knowing the daughter & servant of pltf., whereby he was deprived of her services, pltf. gave in evidence that the daughter lived with him as a member of his family, & was always at home at his house doing the work of the house, assisting in his domestic affairs, & attending on his wife who was in ill health, from shortly after six o'clock in the evening of one day until seven o'clock in the morning of the next day, & that she slept in his house; that during the same time she in the service of deft., hired as a labourer in husbandry to do outdoor work on his farm, at the wages of 5*s.* per week, during the usual hours of labour for such persons, that is to say, from seven in the morning until six o'clock in the evening during the months of Apr., May, June, July, Aug. & Sept. & from eight o'clock in the morning to dusk during the other months of the year:—Held: there was, in point of law, sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the daughter was the servant of pltf.—RIST v. FAUX (1863), 4 B. & S. 409; 2 New Rep. 373; 32 L. 1366. —— Seduction of married woman.]—A father may maintain an action of trespass for the seduction of his daughter & servant, whom he maintains in consideration of her services, though she be a married woman; for though the relation of master & servant subsisting between them, may not be binding as against her husband, it is binding as against a stranger & a wrongdoer.

Where a married woman enters into a contract of hiring & service apart from her husband, she nevertheless continues subject to his control, & the contract may be defeasible by him, by his, at any moment, choosing to renew the exercise of his marital rights. That may be the case quoad the husband; but it by no means follows that the rule would extend to third persons, especially wrongdoers, & that they should be allowed to say that such a contract is void. Wages do not necessarily consist in money payments; & as she and her children were maintained by her father, she did receive such a compensation for her services as may be fairly considered as wages (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—HARPER v. LUFFKIN (1827), 7 B. & C. 387; 1 Man. & Ry. (2) Proof in such case, that the niece, after her seduction & abandonment by deft., returned to her uncle's house, where she continued some time in a state of great agitation, & received medical attendance, & was obliged to be watched, lest she should do herself some injury, is sufficient to raise the presumption of that loss of service by the uncle, which is necessary to maintain the action.—MANVELL v. THOMSON (1826), 2 C. & P. 303, N. 1377. ——.]—The principle on which an action for seduction is maintainable is not that there must be the relationship, or any quasi-relationship, of parent & child. The necessary & sufficient relation is that of master & servant.

An action was brought to recover damages for the seduction of a girl aged twenty-two, the adopted daughter of pltf., a married woman. Pltf. lived with her husband. The girl lived in the house with pltf. & her husband, & without any specific contract of service either with pltf. or her husband performed there the ordinary domestic services of the household. She was given by pltf. about 5*s.* a week for pocket money. Her clothes also were provided for her. The clothes & pocket money were provided out of the husband's money. At the trial evidence of the facts stated above was given, & that deft. had seduced the girl. Pltf. had no separate estate:—Held: the action would not lie at the suit of pltf. The legal relationship of father & child did not by itself justify the maintenance of the action, which could be justified only by the legal fiction to which that relationship gave rise, namely, that a child living with the parent was a servant; & while the wife was living with her husband any ordinary domestic servant employed in the house was the servant of the husband & not of his wife.—PETERS v. JONES, [1914] 2 K. 1389. —— Supporting mother & family—Father living elsewhere.]—In order to support an action by a father for the seduction of his daughter, it is necessary that the relationship of master & servant should subsist between them at the time of the seduction; & the fact that the daughter renders services, in the sense of conferring benefits upon the father, is not, of itself, sufficient to constitute such relationship.

Where the daughter rented a house, & carried on the business of a milliner at the time of her seduction :—Held : the circumstance of her mother & the younger branches of her family residing with her, & receiving part of their support from the proceeds of her business, the father lodging elsewhere, did not constitute such " services " as to entitle the father to maintain the action.—MANLEY v. FIELD (1859), 7 C. After nearly a month the master dismissed her at a day's notice, & the next day, on her way home to her father's house, deft. seduced her :—Held : as soon as the real service was put an end to by the master, whether rightfully or wrongfully, the girl intending to return home, the right of the father to her services revived, & there was therefore sufficient evidence of service to maintain an action for the seduction.

based, from the earliest times hitherto, not upon the seduction itself, nor upon the wrongful act of deft., but on the loss of service of the daughter, in which service he is supposed to have a legal right & interest. It has always been held that the loss of service must be alleged in the declaration & loss of service must be proved at the trial, or pltf. must fail. It is the invasion of the legal right of the master to the services of the servant that gives him a right of action for the beating of the servant, & it is the invasion of the same legal right, & no other, that gives the father a right of action against the seducer of his daughter; so that the original act is not the cause of the action; but the consequence upon it, namely, the loss of the service, is the cause of the action (TINDAL, C.J.). —GRINNELL v. WELLS (1844), 7 Man. & G. 1033; 2 Dow. & L. 610; 8 Scott, N. SUB-SECT. 2.—RIGHT OF ACTION.

A. In General.

1451. For battery of servant.]—In an action of assault & battery, deft. justified in defence of his servant, that pltf. had assaulted his servant, & would have beaten him:—Held: master may defend his servant, & shall have action for beating him.—SEAMAN v. CUPPLEDICK (1615), Owen, 150; 74 E. (2) If a man slanders a servant at which the servant is so grieved that he cannot perform his duties, the master has no action (COKE, C.J.).

(3) Where a surgeon is employed by a master to cure his servant, the master may sue for breach of contract in not supplying wholesome medicine, but the servant cannot sue on his contract.—EVERARD v. HOPKINS (1615), 2 Bulst. 332; 1 Roll. Rep. 124; 80 E. R. 1164.

1456. —— Negligent driving.]—A master may sue in case, for the consequential damage arising to him from an injury to his servant, though the only remedy of the servant for the injury be by action on the case also.

Where the declaration alleged that G. was & is the servant of pltfs.; that he had been injured by the negligent driving of deft., whereby pltfs. were deprived of his services, & forced to pay another person wages during his illness; on motion in arrest of judgment:—Held: (1) the action was maintainable; (2) it sufficiently appeared from the declaration, that G. was entitled to receive his wages from pltfs. during his illness.

(3) A general allegation of service is sufficient without stating that the servant was hired or that he was to receive a salary.—MARTINEZ v. GERBER (1841), 3 Man. & G. 88; Drinkwater, 231; 3 Scott, N. R. 386; 10 L. J. C. P. 314; 5 Jur. 463; 133 E. R. 1069.

1457. —— Breach of duty arising out of contract—With servant injured.]—One who is no party to a contract cannot sue in respect of the breach of a duty arising out of the contract.

An action will not lie against a railway co., as carriers of passengers for hire, at the suit of a master, for a personal injury sustained through their negligence by his servant, whereby the master lost the benefit of the services of the servant, the contract out of which arose the duty to carry safely being a contract between the co. & the servant.—ALTON v. MIDLAND RY. E. Measure of Damages.

1485. Compensation for injury to feelings—Action by father.]—If pltf.'s son, who was in fact his servant, in delivering parcels from a stage coach, receive an injury, by which the father is deprived of his services, the father is not entitled, as part of the damages in an action for loss of his son's services, to have a compensation for the injury done to his parental feelings.—FLEMINGTON v. SMITHERS (1826), 2 C. & P. 292.

1486. Prospective damages—Permanent injury of servant.]—In an action for permanently injuring the hand of an apprentice, whereby loss of service accrued, the master may recover for prospective damage, for the damage alone is not the cause of action, but the illegal act & the damage together, & the master could not bring a fresh action as often as fresh damage resulted.—HODSOLL v. STALLEBRASS (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 301; 8 Dowl. 482; 3 Per. & Dav. 200; 9 L. 1488. Compensation paid to servant by master.]—Pltfs., a firm of stevedores, contracted to discharge a cargo from deft.'s ship, deft. agreeing to supply all necessary cranes, chains, & other gearing reasonably fit for that purpose. Deft. in breach of his agreement supplied a defective chain, which broke while being used, & in consequence one of pltfs.' workmen was injured. Pltfs. might have discovered the defect in the chain by the exercise of reasonable care. The workman brought an action for compensation under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), ss. 1, 2, against pltfs., who settled the action by paying the workman £125, which sum they sought to recover from deft. as damages for breach of his contract. It was not disputed that the settlement of the action brought by the workman was a proper one:—Held: pltfs.' liability to pay compensation to their workman was the natural consequence of deft.'s breach of contract, & such as might reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into, & therefore the damages claimed were not too remote.—MOWBRAY v. MERRYWEATHER, [1895] 2 Q. 1489. Amount of pensions payable to relatives of deceased servant—Voluntary payments in nature of compassionate allowances—Remoteness.]—One of His Majesty's submarines was run into & sunk by a steamship & the crew were drowned. In an action of damage by collision brought by the Comrs. for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom against the owners of the steamship, defts. submitted to judgment on the basis of paying to pltfs. 95 per cent. of their damage to be assessed by the Admlty. Registrar. Pltfs. claimed as an item of damage the capitalised amount of the pensions payable by them to the relatives of deceased men:—

Held: the claim failed; on the principle of Baker v. Bolton, No. 1478, ante, that in a civil ct. the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury &, on the ground of remoteness, the pensions being voluntary payments in the nature of compassionate allowances.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. SS. 1490. Special pension payable on disablement.]—By the contract entered into in 1901 between a municipal corpn. & a constable in their service, the constable, if injured in the execution of his duty, was entitled to full pay during his incapacity. By the Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), & Regs. thereunder, the constable, if he had been able to serve until 1926, would have been entitled to retire on an annual pension of about £67, but, if at any time he was permanently incapacitated by injury in the execution of his duty, he was to be entitled to a special pension at a higher rate. Pensions were paid out of a police pension fund to which the corpn. contributed only 31¾ per cent., the rest of the fund being derived from other sources. In Sept. 1917, the constable, then aged thirty-nine, was injured in the execution of his duty by a steam wagon belonging to deft. in charge of his employee. From the date of the constable's injury to Oct. 1918, when it was first known that he was permanently incapacitated, the corpn. paid him his full wages, amounting to £185 0*s.* 10*d.*, & as from the latter date they awarded him a special pension for life of about £99 per annum. In June, 1919, the corpn. brought an action against deft. for damages for loss of service of the constable by the alleged negligence of deft.'s employee which deft. admitted:—Held: pltf. corpn. was entitled to recover, as damages in respect of the wages paid to the constable, the amount thereof, namely, £185 0*s.* 10*d.*,; in view more particularly of the facts that in consequence of the injury to the constable the corpn. had to pay him a pension sooner & at a higher rate than would otherwise have been the case, the corpn. was entitled to recover as damages in respect of the pension, a sum which in all the circumstances would be fairly assessed at £150; & there should therefore be judgment for the Corporation for £335 0*s.* 10*d.*—BRADFORD CORPN. v. WEBSTER, [1920] 2 K. 1511. ——.]—W. was surveyor to the owner of an estate, to which estate he, W., also acted as steward. The owner directed W. to make inquiries as to the existence on the estate of a house of bad character. W. in the course of his inquiries was referred to the house of B., but doubting the accuracy of his information made further inquiries & in the course of doing so mentioned what he had heard of the character of B.'s house. He then ascertained that the address of B.'s house had been given him erroneously, & that, by a mistake in the number of the street, a reference had been made to B.'s house which was intended for another residence. In an action filed for libel by B. against W. for the statements made by W. while following up the inquiries directed by his employer, & the further pursuit of which inquiries had been suggested by the erroneous information he, W., had received as to B.'s house. The judge directed the jury to consider whether the statements made by W. had been made in the course of the inquiries he had been directed by his employer to make, & whether such inquiries were in excess of his duty, & beyond the directions he had received from his employer or not, but did not direct them, that if the statements relied upon as slanderous were only made in the necessary course of pursuing the inquiries he had been directed by his employer to make, he would have been within his duty, & they, the jury, should then consider whether there was any proof of express malice or not:—Held: this direction was wrong, & in the absence of evidence of actual malice, the judge ought to have pointed out to the jury all the evidence bearing upon the character of deft.'s employment & the course of duty in which the statements charged as slanderous were made in order that the jury might have expressly found whether such statements were or were not made in pursuance of his duties under his employment, & the ct. have been enabled to decide upon such finding whether there was or was not existing such malice as would be implied by law & which might be rebutted by the character of privileged communication attaching to such statements.—BRETT v. WATSON (1872), 20 W. 1565. —— ——.]—Pltf.'s master had completed a contract on deft.'s premises. After its completion, pltf., by his master's orders, went on to deft.'s premises for a purpose incidental to the contract. Near pltf. was an unfenced shaft, down which he fell, & injured himself. The jury found that deft. had not used reasonable care with respect to the shaft, & that pltf. had not contributed to the accident by his own negligence:—Held: pltf., being on deft.'s premises for a purpose incidental to a contract which had just been completed, by his order, was not a mere volunteer, but was in the position of a purchaser invited by the shopkeeper into a shop with unconcealed danger in it, & it was, therefore, the duty of deft. to have put up some safeguard around the shaft, or to have given pltf. reasonable notice of the danger. It made no difference in the liability of a shopkeeper for injuries sustained in his shop through his negligence, that the purchaser sends his servant instead of going himself.—INDERMAUR v. DAMES (1867), L. a lift for the purpose of raising articles supplied by tradesmen to the various flats. The lift was in the form of a box, with a weight on the top, & was pulled up & down from below. It ran outside the building in iron guides & communicated with the scullery windows of the flats, & it was the landlords' duty to keep it in repair. Pltf., a servant of one of the tenants of the flats, was on Dec. 1, 1909, signalled to go to the lift, & she accordingly went to the scullery window, & was in the act of taking out some articles from the lift when some one pulled it down, with the result that the top of it struck her on the head & injured her. In an action claiming damages from the landlords in respect of her injuries it was alleged that the landlords were negligent in having constructed & maintained the lift without the means of keeping it stationary at a window. Evidence was given that on the day in question the lift was not out of repair, & that it had been in use for eighteen years without any accident having occurred. The jury found that the landlords were guilty of a breach of duty in supplying & maintaining a lift which was a source of danger to those likely to use it, & judgment was entered for pltf. On appeal by the landlords:—Held: the landlords had not been guilty of any negligence, & pltf. was not entitled to recover.—POWELL v. THORNDIKE (1910), 102 L. T. 600; 26 T. L. R. 399, D. C.

1569. —— —— Defective gas pipe.]—Deft., a gasfitter, was employed by pltf.'s master to repair a gas-meter upon his premises, & for the purpose of doing so took away the meter & in lieu of it made a temporary connection by means of a flexible tube between the inlet pipe & the pipe communicating with the house. Pltf. having gone, in the ordinary performance of his duty, with a light into the cellar where the meter had been, gas, which had escaped by reason of the insufficiency of the connecting tube, exploded & injured him. The jury found that the work had been negligently done, & that the injury to pltf. proceeded entirely from such negligence:—Held: deft. was liable.—PARRY v. SMITH (1879), 4 C. P. D. 325; 48 L. J. Pltf. was a workman in the employ of a ship painter who had contracted with the shipowner to paint the outside of a ship, & in order to do the painting pltf. went on & used the staging, when one of the ropes by which it was slung, being unfit for use when supplied by deft., broke, & by reason thereof pltf. fell into the dock & was injured:—Held: pltf., being engaged on work on the vessel in the performance of which deft., as dock owner, was interested, deft. was under an obligation to him to take reasonable care that at the time he supplied the ropes & staging they were in a fit state to be used, & for the neglect of such duty was liable to pltf. for the injury he had sustained.—HEAVEN v. PENDER (1883), 11 Q. 1571. —— —— Defective trucks.]—Deft., a colliery owner, consigned coals sold by him to the buyers by rail in a truck rented by him from a waggon co. for purposes of the colliery. Through the negligence of deft.'s servants the truck was allowed to leave the colliery in a defective state. In consequence of the defect in the truck injury was occasioned to pltf., one of the buyers' servants, who was employed in unloading the coals, & had got into the truck for that purpose:—Held: there was a duty on the part of deft. towards pltf. to exercise reasonable care with regard to the condition of the truck, & deft. was therefore liable to pltf. in respect of the injuries sustained by him.—ELLIOTT v. HALL (1885), 15 Q. 1572. —— Apart from contract—Servant not acting in course of employment—Bare licencee.]—Deceased was employed by a builder to watch & protect certain unfinished buildings. Workmen were employed by deft., a contractor, on the land near to where the deceased was on duty, to excavate the earth for the foundations of other buildings. In the performance of this operation they employed a steam crane & winch to which were attached a chain & iron bucket by means of which the earth was raised from the excavation & thence to the carts which were to carry it away. The deceased had nothing to do with the excavations, but was standing where he need not have been, watching deft.'s men at work, & allowing the bucket to pass some three feet over his head, when the chain broke & the bucket & its contents falling upon him so injured him that he subsequently died:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence in deft.'s workmen: deceased was at the most a bare licensee; & he stood where he did subject to all the risks incident to the position in which he had placed himself.—BATCHELOR v. FORTESCUE (1883), 11 Q. 1573. —— —— Servant compelled to encounter danger.]—Pltf. was a workman, who was directed by his employer to work in a particular place. Defts. were contractors engaged in work above the place where pltf. was working. Defts.' work was of such a nature as to be dangerous to persons working below, unless proper precautions were taken for their safety. Pltf. was aware of the danger. Pltf., while working where he was directed by his employer, was injured by a piece of iron dropped by defts.' workmen, & brought an action to recover damages for the injury. The jury found that defts. had been guilty of negligence in not taking proper precautions for those below, that there was no contributory negligence on the part of pltf., & that pltf. did not voluntarily incur the risk :—Held : the case was rightly left to the jury, although pltf. was aware of the danger, yet, as he was compelled by the orders of his employer to work where he was working when the accident happened, the maxim volenti non fit injuria did not apply, & he was entitled to recover.—THRUSSELL v. HANDYSIDE (1888), 20 Q. 1575. Servant's position no better than that of master—No right of action by master—Gratuitous loan of defective chattel to master.]—Deft. had erected a scaffold for his own use, he afterwards contracted with P. to pull down a certain wall of deft.'s. There was no provision in the contract for the use of the scaffold, but deft. was aware of its being used, & allowed P. to use it gratuitously. One of the put-logs or cross-supports on which the planks of the scaffold rested turned out to be rotten, but there was no evidence that deft. knew of this defect. The put-log gave way, & caused an injury to pltf., who was a labourer employed by P. :—Held : a gratuitous lender is not responsible to the borrower for injuries caused otherwise than directly by defects in the chattel in reference to the use for which he knows the loan was accepted, & of which defects he was aware, & the servant of the borrower is in no better position than his master would have been.—MACCARTHY v. YOUNG (1861), 6 H. & N. 329 ; 30 L. 1576. —— —— Defective fence owned by master.]—Deft. kept swine in a field which he occupied, & which adjoined the line of a railway co., who were bound, under Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 33), s. 68, to maintain sufficient fences between their line & the field. The existing fence was sufficient to keep out oxen, sheep & horses, but not swine, & deft.'s swine crawled through the fence & upset a trolly of the co., which was travelling on the line. Pltf., a plate-layer in the co.'s service, who was travelling on the trolly in the course of his service, was injured by the accident, & now sued deft. for the damages caused thereby. Deft. knew that some of his swine had on a former occasion strayed on to the line & been killed by a train, & he had been warned that the fence was insufficient to keep in the pigs :—Held : the co. could not have sued deft. for trespass because they were bound under the statute to maintain a fence sufficient to keep out swine, & the present action would not lie, because pltf. could not be in a better position than the co., his employers.—CHILD v. HEARN (1874), L. 1578. —— Whether action lies for trover—Military officer.]—Where a colonel had purchased horses for the govt. & they being approved of by the proper inspecting officer, were sent under the care of a serjeant to the receiving depot for His Majesty's use :—Held : the colonel had not such a special property as to maintain trover for one of them which was taken out of the possession of the serjeant, as a distress for a turnpike toll.

You cannot make my servant, whose possession is my possession, my bailee. He is not liable as a bailee. Where goods are delivered to another as a bailee, the special property passes to him ; but here it does not. He is merely the servant of the govt. 1579. Loss of own property—Action against railway company—Though ticket taken by master.]—A servant travelling with his master on a railway may have an action in his own name against the railway co. for the loss of his luggage, although the master took & paid for his ticket. The liability of the railway co. in such a case is independent of the contract.

A declaration stated that deft. received pltf. & his luggage to be carried for reward to deft.'s in that behalf & it was proved that pltf.'s master paid his fare & took the ticket :—Held : it was immaterial by whom the reward was to be paid, & the allegation in the declaration was proved.—MARSHALL v. YORK, NEWCASTLE & BERWICK RY. 1585. —— ——.]—The servant of defts., who were cab proprietors, went out one night in Dec. with his master's cab. Later at night the horse & cab came home without the driver. There was no indication of any accident having happened. The horse had on former occasions, when left unattended, returned home by itself. One of defts., who saw the horse & cab return, went to a public-house in the neighbourhood to look for the driver, but found it closed, & he accordingly returned home. Next morning the driver was found in an unconscious condition, suffering from injuries which indicated that he had fallen from his seat on the cab, & he died in a week, his death being accelerated by the exposure. In an action by his widow to recover damages for his death, the county court judge held that there was a duty upon deft., who was aware that the horse had returned without a driver, to institute a proper search or to make inquiries, & that he had neglected that duty. He accordingly awarded pltf. damages:—Held: in the circumstances, there was no duty on defts. to make a search for the driver, & they were entitled to judgment.

No doubt an employer has a duty to take reasonable precautions to ensure the safety of his servants. That means it is his duty to take precautions to prevent accidents happening (PHILLIMORE, J.).—BOND v. WILSON & SONS (1908), 24 T. L. R. 238, D. C.

Pltf. complained of the dangerous state of the machinery, & deft. promised him that the fencing should be restored. Pltf., without any negligence on his part, was severely injured in consequence of the machinery remaining unfenced:—Held: deft. was liable for the injury.

Where a servant is employed on machinery from the use of which danger may arise, it is the duty of the master to take due care, & to use all reasonable means, to guard against & prevent any defects from which increased & unnecessary danger may occur. No doubt, when a servant enters on an employment from its nature necessarily hazardous, he accepts the service subject to the risks incidental to it; or, if he thinks proper to accept an employment on machinery defective from its construction, or from the want of proper repair, & with knowledge of the facts enters on the service, the master cannot be held liable for injury to the servant within the scope of the danger which both the contracting parties contemplated as incidental to the employment. The employers had provided no ladder or other safe means of ascending to & descending from the tramway. In an action brought by the widow of deceased against his employers under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), to recover damages in respect of his death, the jury found (a) that defts had not exercised due care to have the tramway in a safe & proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks; (b) that it was dangerous to descend from the tramway without a ladder; (c) that deceased had the same means of knowing that it was dangerous as defts. had; & (d) that deceased did know that it was dangerous:—Held: in the absence of any finding by the jury that deceased had agreed to undertake the risk of descending from the tramway without a ladder or other safe means of descent, pltf. was entitled to judgment upon the findings of the jury.

If the employment is of a dangerous nature, a duty lies on the employer to use all reasonable precautions for the protection of the servant. If by reason of breach of that duty a servant suffers injury, the employer is primâ facie liable. . . . 1593. Not protection from extraordinary danger.]—From the mere relation of master & servant no contract can be implied on the part of the master to take due & ordinary care not to expose the servant to extraordinary danger & risk in the course of his employment.

An administratrix suing under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), alleging in her declaration that deceased entered the service of defts. as a porter, "on the terms that defts. would take due & ordinary care not to expose him to extraordinary danger & risk in the course of his employment," & that he was, from want of such care, exposed to extraordinary danger & risk & killed; but not proposing to give any evidence of an express contract on such terms, was held to have been rightly non-suited.

1608. —— Whether master bound to adopt improvements.]—Where an injury happens to a servant while in the actual use of an instrument, engine or machine, in the course of his employment, of the nature of which he is as much aware as his master, & the use of which is, therefore, the proximate cause of the injury, he cannot, at all events if the evidence is consistent with his own negligence in the use of it being the real cause, nor in case of his dying from the injury can his representative, under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), recover against his master, there being no evidence that the injury arose through the personal negligence of the master. Nor is it any evidence of such personal negligence of the master that he has in use in his works an engine or machine less safe than some other which is in general use.

Therefore, where a labourer was killed through the fall of a weight which he was raising by means of an engine to which he attached it by fastening on to it a clip, & the clip had slipped off it:—Held: there was no case to go to the jury in an action by his representative against the master, although it appeared that another & safer mode of raising the weights was usual, & had been discarded by the orders of deft.—DYNEN v. LEACH (1857), 26 L. 1617. —— ——.]—Pltf., the headmaster of a non-provided school, while discharging his duties in the school, was injured through the bursting of a boiler connected with the heating apparatus. In 1905 the heating apparatus & boiler were inspected & pltf. was warned that owing to the obsolete character of the apparatus & boiler, there was a danger of the boiler bursting. Pltf. duly reported the matter to the managers & subsequently, on several occasions, he brought the dangerous condition of the boiler to the notice of the managers, but nothing was done to remedy the defect. In Feb. 1919, as the result of a severe frost, the pipe of the heating apparatus got blocked, causing pressure of steam in the boiler which resulted in its bursting. Defts. were the managers of the school at the time of the accident. Two of them were appointed in 1904, one in 1908, & the remainder since 1908:—Held: (1) defts. were under a liability to keep the school house in good repair & were under the duty of taking reasonable care to provide proper appliances & to maintain them in a proper condition so as not to subject those employed by them to unnecessary risk; (2) on the facts, each of the managers, on taking office, was negligent in not ascertaining & remedying the condition of the heating apparatus, & in the case of the three managers appointed before 1909, they were negligent after having had notice by pltf. of the condition of the boiler; (3) pltf., having reported the matter, was not negligent in opening the school & having the fire lighted after the severe frost of Feb. 1919; (4) pltf. did not voluntarily incur the risk; (5) pltf. was entitled to succeed.—ABBOTT v. ISHAM (1920), 90 L. 1619. —— Machinery.]—Pltf., a stevedore in deft.'s service, was engaged in loading deft.'s ship with iron girders, which were being lifted on board by a chain attached to a donkey engine, when the chain suddenly snapped & a girder fell upon pltf. & injured him. It appeared from the evidence that some of the links of the chain were worn, & some also were badly welded; & that a person accustomed to chains could, on looking at the chain in question have observed these defects; also that there were well known methods adopted by "chain testers" for examining & testing chains. The chain in question which had been employed for the purpose, had been in use on deft.'s premises for seven years, & had not been examined or tested in any way before the accident. The jury found in answer to questions put by the learned judge, that the breaking of the chain was caused partly by bad welding & partly by its worn condition; that it was not in a fit condition for the work it was put to or to sustain the weight lifted by it; that deft. did not know of its defective state, but that he might have discovered it had he chosen to examine the chain himself or to have had it examined by a competent person:—Held: deft. having failed in his duty to ascertain the condition of the chain, was liable to pltf., his servant, in an action to recover damages for the injury sustained by the latter through the breaking of the chain.—MURPHY v. PHILLIPS (1876), 35 L. 1620. —— Ship.]—Deft. chartered for a single voyage a vessel which was at the time at sea & in ballast. The charterparty declared that she was in every way fit for the service, & provided that she should be so maintained by the owners. On the afternoon of Apr. 5 the vessel was put at deft.'s disposal in dock, & two hours afterwards the loading began, deft. having contracted with a stevedore for the purpose who had engaged pltf. amongst others to carry out the work. Fifteen minutes later pltf., in the course of his work, had to descend a ladder leading into the hold. It came adrift, & pltf. fell, sustaining injuries for which he sued deft.:—Held: deft. was liable to pltf., since it was his duty under the circumstances to make some inspection of the vessel before allowing the stevedore & his men to go on board her, & since the slightest inspection would have revealed the defective state of the ladder.—MARNEY v. SCOTT, [1899] 1 Q. 1621. —— Domestic premises.]—(1) A master is not under any legal duty to his servant to have any periodical or other examination of ordinary domestic premises, which are apparently in good condition for the purpose of discovering whether any defects exist which may be a possible source of danger to the servants employed upon the premises.

(2) The duty of a master towards his servant, in regard to premises of the master where the servant works, is to take reasonable care to maintain the premises in a condition free from any concealed danger of which the master is aware or ought to be aware.

Pltf., a chauffeur, was employed by deft. to take charge of her motor car & of the garage where it was kept. In the top of the door of the garage there was a window for admitting light to the garage. Whilst pltf., who had been in deft.'s service for about a fortnight, was opening the garage door from the inside to admit the car, a heavy piece of glass fell from the window & injured him. The evidence showed that the glass was of unusual weight & thickness, that portions of the beading & putty which had originally held the glass in position had at some time come away, & that a nail had been driven into the door with a view to making the glass secure. There was no evidence that either pltf. or deft. knew of the defective condition of the window. There was some evidence that such premises should be periodically examined, but there was no evidence to show the usual or proper periods at which they should be examined, or that deft. had negligently failed to secure a proper examination:—Held: (3) it was the duty of deft. to take reasonable care to maintain the premises in a condition free from any concealed dangers of which deft. knew or ought to know; (4) there was no evidence from which a jury could infer negligence on the part of deft.—COLE v. DE TRAFFORD (No. 2), [1918] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—RISKS UNDERTAKEN BY SERVANT.

A. In General.

1627. General rule—All risks incidental to employment.]—HUTCHINSON v. YORK, NEWCASTLE & BERWICK RY. CO., No. 1697, post.

1628. —— ——.]—A declaration in case stated that deft. was possessed of a theatre & a stage therein for dramatic performances, & of a dressing room there, & a floor underneath the stage, in which floor was a hole, & along which floor the performers were accustomed to pass to & from the dressing room; that deft. hired pltf. to act & sing on the said stage, & that pltf., on, etc., did act & sing in a certain opera performed for deft.'s profit; & that it then became the duty of deft. to cause the floor to be sufficiently lighted, & the hole to be sufficiently fenced, etc.; yet deft. well knowing the premises, suffered & permitted the floor to be insufficiently lighted, & the hole to be open without any sufficient fence, whereby pltf., who was, after the performance, passing from the back of the stage to the dressing room along the floor, fell into the hole, & was grievously injured, etc.:—Held: bad in arrest of judgment; because the facts stated disclosed no duty, of which any breach was alleged, & the express allegation of duty was wholly immaterial.

If pltf. complains of a breach of duty on the part of deft., it is necessary for him to show the circumstances out of which that duty arises. Here he shows that he was hired to do certain service upon premises, in which there was a hole insufficiently lighted & guarded; but that imports no duty on the part of the master to guard or light that hole. It is for the servant to choose whether he will be hired upon such premises. This is in no respect different from the case of service in a house, of which the staircase is steep & difficult; the servant need not engage to serve in that house; but if he does, there is no contract on the part of the master that the house shall be in a particular state (ERLE, J.).—SEYMOUR v. MADDOX (1851), 16 Q. Sect. 1.—At common law: Sub-sect. 2, A. & B.; sub-sect. 3, A.] 1635. ——— ——— ———.]—(1) In an action by a labourer against his employers for an injury caused by the fall of a scaffold pole, proved to have fallen through the rottenness of the end put into the earth, it appearing that it had been in the earth 2 years, & that though some poles might last as long without being rotten, others would not; & that no one was employed from time to time to take up the poles to see if they were sound:—Held: if the jury thought the pole was left in the ground an unreasonable time without examination, there was evidence of negligence to sustain the action.

(2) Where a particular service necessarily involves a certain amount of danger, the servant who engages in the employment must submit to the risks attendant upon it in the course of its ordinary conduct & management; but on the other hand, the servant had a right to expect that he shall only be exposed to the ordinary risks of the employment, & that the machinery or apparatus about which he is to be employed, & out of which danger arises, shall be attended to with reasonable care, to insure its being in a fit state to be worked without undue or extraordinary danger to those employed in or about it (COCKBURN, C.J.).

(3) Although in general an employer was not liable unless he knew of the danger, yet it was his business to know if, by reasonable care & precaution, he could ascertain whether the apparatus or machinery were in a fit state or not. It was not enough, therefore, that the master did not know of the danger if, by reasonable care, he might have known, & if, reasonably, he ought to have known, & to have taken the proper means of knowing (COCKBURN, C.J.).

(4) Although he would not be liable merely on account of the negligence of his servants, yet it was his duty either himself to take the proper means of knowing of the danger, or to employ come competent person to do so. . . . The master must either ascertain the state of the machinery or apparatus himself, or employ some competent person to do so; & if he did employ such a person, & a workman was injured in consequence of that person's neglect of his duty in that respect, the master would not be liable to one of his servants for such negligence of a fellow servant in the particular matter (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WEBB v. RENNIE (1865), 4 F. & F. 608.

1636. ——— ——— ———.]—If a party, whether a servant or otherwise, undertakes an employment which involves danger of accident, & an accident occur, he cannot sue his employer for damages, although such accident might have been avoided by additional care on the part of the master. A., who contracted with deft. to do certain work upon deft.'s premises, engaged pltf. as his servant to assist in doing such work. Upon the premises there was a large hole in the ground floor, which led down by a ladder to a urinal & water-closet for the use of the men employed. This hole was unprotected, & in a somewhat dark place, but pltf. knew of its existence & had used it. Having fallen down this hole & broken his leg, he sued deft. for damages for negligence:—Held: there was no negligence on the part of deft., & pltf. was not entitled to recover.—BROOKS v. COURTNEY (1869), 20 L. T. 440; 33 J. P. 453.

Annotation:—Refd. Weblin v. Ballard (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 122.

1637. ——— ——— ———.]—Pltf. was a sheetroller in the service of defts. at their steel works, & had been so for three years. Five steam engines properly constructed were used in the factory. Some stood at a distance from the other, but two men only were employed to attend to them all, as pltf. well knew. During the necessary absence of both the engine tenters, without negligence on their part, an engine ran away, or revolved too fast, & caused a drum connected with it to fly to pieces, one of which, passing through a yard, entered the mill where pltf. worked, & hurt him. The runaway engine might have been stopped in time to prevent mischief if an attendant had been near it. Pltf. having brought an action against deft., was nonsuited on the above facts, & the nonsuit was upheld by the Ct. of Exch.:—Held: pltf., being aware of the dangers incidental to his employment, contracted to take the risks, & therefore could not recover.—SAXTON v. HAWKSWORTH (1872), 26 L. T. 851, Exch.

1638. ——— ——— ———.]—Pltf., a workman in the employ of a contractor engaged by defts., had to work in a dark tunnel rendered dangerous by the passing of trains. After he had been working a fortnight he was injured by a passing train. The jury found that defts. in not adopting any precautions for the protection of pltf. had been guilty of negligence:—Held: pltf. having continued in his employment with full knowledge, could not make defts. liable for an injury arising from danger to which he voluntarily exposed himself.

If pltf., in doing the work on the railway, is to be looked upon as the servant of the co., the decision of the Ct. of Exch. in his favour cannot, as it seems to me, be upheld. It could not be said that any deception was practised on pltf. as to the degree of danger to which he would be exposed. He must be taken to have been aware of the nature & character of the work & its attendant risks when he entered into the employ of the contractor for the job in question, or at all events he must have become fully aware of it as soon as he began to work. If he had been misled in supposing that precautionary measures such as the dangerous nature of the service rendered reasonably necessary would be taken, he had a right to throw up his engagement & to decline to go on with the work; & such would have been his proper course. But with a full knowledge of the danger, he continued in the employment, & had been working in the tunnel for a fortnight when the accident happened. A man who enters on a necessarily dangerous employment with his eyes open takes it with its accompanying risks. On the other hand, if the danger is concealed from him & an accident happens before he becomes aware of it, or if he is led to expect, or may reasonably expect, that proper precautions will be adopted by the employer to prevent or lessen the danger, & from the want of such precautions an accident happens to him before he has become aware of their absence, he may hold the employer liable. If he becomes aware of the danger which has been concealed from him, & which he had not the means of becoming acquainted with before he entered on the employment, or of the want of the necessary means to prevent mischief, his proper course is to quit the employment. If he continues in it, he is in the same position as though he had accepted it with a full knowledge of its danger in the first instance, & must be taken to waive his right to call upon the employer to do what is necessary for his protection, or in the alternative to quit the service. If he continues to take the benefit of the employment, he must take it subject to its disadvantages. He cannot put on the employer terms to which he has now full notice that the employer never intended to bind himself. It is competent to an employer, at least so far as civil consequences are concerned, to invite persons to work for him under circumstances of danger caused or aggravated by want of due precautions on the part of the employer. If a man chooses to accept the employment, or to continue in it with a knowledge of the danger, he must abide the consequences, so far as any claim to compensation against the employer is concerned. Morally speaking, those who employ men on dangerous work without doing all in their power to obviate the danger are highly reprehensible, as I certainly think the co. were in the present instance. The workman who depends on his employment for the bread of himself & his family is thus tempted to incur risks to which, as a matter of humanity, he ought not to be exposed. But looking at the matter in a legal point of view, if a man for the sake of the employment, takes it or continues in it with a knowledge of its risks, he must trust to himself to keep clear of injury (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WOODLEY v. METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RY. As she was leaving the kitchen a savage dog, which was generally tied up, rushed from under the table and bit her leg. Pltf. was aware that a dog of this kind was kept on the premises. The county ct. judge at the trial nonsuited pltf., on the ground that as pltf. was a servant, & knew the disposition of the dog, no action was maintainable:—Held: the nonsuit was wrong, inasmuch as the risk was not incidental to the service, & there was evidence to go to the jury of the liability of deft. for the injury sustained by pltf.—MANSFIELD v. BADDELEY (1876), 34 L. 1646. Whether barred by election to accept compensation under Workmen's Compensation Acts—Infant apprentice.]—An apprentice who was an infant, met with an accident in the course of his employment, & he agreed with his employers to accept a weekly payment amounting to half his wages in compensation, & signed a receipt, which stated that he elected to accept this sum under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), in full satisfaction & discharge of all claims for compensation. Subsequently he brought an action against his employers at common law for damages in respect of the same injuries, based on their negligence in not having fenced the machine plane:—Held: the Act by including an apprentice in the general word "workman" did not alter the law applicable to contracts made by infants, & it not being for the infant's benefit to accept compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), his election to accept same did not bind him, & his claim under the Act was therefore no bar to his common law right to sue.—STEPHENS v. DUDBRIDGE IRONWORKS CO., [1904] 2 K. 1657. Negligent system of work.]—When a workman engaged in an employment not in itself dangerous is exposed to danger arising from an operation in another department over which he has no control, the danger being created or enhanced by the negligence of the employer, the mere fact that he undertakes or continues in such employment with full knowledge & understanding of the danger is not conclusive to show that he has undertaken the risk so as to make the maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" applicable in case of injury. The question whether he has so undertaken the risk is one of fact & not of law, & this is so both at common law & in cases arising under Employers Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42).

Pltf. was employed by railway contractors to drill holes in a rock cutting near a crane worked by men in the employ of the contractors. The crane lifted stones & at times swung them over pltf.' head without warning. Pltf was fully aware of the danger to which he was exposed by thus working near the crane without any warning being given, & had been thus employed for months. A stone having fallen from the crane & injured pltf., he sued his employers in the county ct. under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42). The jury found (a) that the machinery for lifting the stone, taken as a whole, was not reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was applied; (b) that the omission to supply special means of warning was a defect in the ways, works, machinery & plant; (c) that the employers, or some person engaged by them to look after the condition of the works, etc., were guilty of negligence in not remedying the defect; (d) that pltf. was not guilty of contributory negligence; (e) that he did not voluntarily undertake a risky employment with a knowledge of its risks; & returned a verdict for pltf. for damages. Application having been made to enter judgment for defts. on the ground that the case ought not to have gone to the jury, pltf. having admitted that he knew of the risk & voluntarily incurred it:—Held: (1) the mere fact that pltf. undertook & continued in the employment with full knowledge & understanding of the danger arising from the systematic neglect to give warning did not preclude him from recovering; the evidence would justify a finding that pltf. did not voluntarily undertake the risk of injury, the maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" did not apply.

The principle embodied in the maxim has sometimes been stated thus: A person who is engaged to perform a dangerous operation takes upon himself the risks incident thereto. To the proposition thus stated that is no difficulty in giving an assent, provided that what is meant by engaging to perform a dangerous operation, & by the risks incident thereto, be properly defined. . . . Where a person undertakes to do work which is intrinsically dangerous, notwithstanding that reasonable care has been taken to render it as little dangerous as possible, he no doubt voluntarily subjects himself to the risks inevitably accompanying it (LORD HERSCHELL).

1661. —— Without lawful excuse.]—A master is liable for accidents occasioned by his neglect towards those whom he employs, while they are engaged in his employment, but great latitude must be given to the phrase "engaged in his employment," eundo morando et redeundo; & it makes not the slightest difference, that at the time of the accident the servant was leaving his work without lawful excuse or proper cause.

A., a miner employed to work in the mine of B. went down as usual to his day's work, but he & the other miners, after working a short time, held a meeting amongst themselves to discuss certain supposed grievances, & they resolved before working further, to come up from the pit at twelve o'clock, the usual hour for their coming up being five o'clock & go in a body to represent their grievance to B.'s manager. While so coming up A. was killed by a stone which fell from the top of the shaft, the planking there being in an unsafe state. A.'s representatives brought an action of damages against B., & the judge told the jury that B. was not responsible for the accident, if A. was at the time leaving his work without proper cause & for a purpose of his own. The jury found that A. was leaving his work without proper cause, but that he was killed owing to the unsafe state of the planking at the mouth of the pit:—Held: the ruling of the judge was wrong, & whether A. had just cause for leaving his work or not, & was coming up for a purpose of his own, still B. was responsible, being bound to take A. up just as safely as he let him down.—MARSHALL v. STEWART (1855), 25 L. Plea, not guilty. At the trial it was proved that S., one of the two defts., was manager of the mine, & that it was

How far does that apply to the present case? There is no evidence, as regards this machine, that the master was aware of any danger at all, & the particular danger which it was suggested he was aware of was not anything in the machine itself, the only defect being the oiling of the floor of the lift, & as to that, I fail to find any evidence that the master knew anything about it (COLLINS, M.R.).—LLOYD v. WOOLLAND BROTHERS (1902), 19 T. 1673. What constitutes knowledge of master—Not knowledge of general foreman.]—Pltf., a labourer in the employ of defts., builders in a large way of business, being engaged in raising a scaffolding, found that there was an insufficient supply of flat boards for the purpose. He complained to the foreman of the scaffolders & also defts.' general manager or foreman. In consequence of the absence of flat boards pltf. was obliged to stand on a round putlog & his foot slipping he fell & was much hurt. Having brought an action against defts., the jury found that there had been no negligence on pltf.'s part, & that the scaffold was insecure & insufficient to the knowledge not of defts., but of the general foreman & the foreman of the scaffolders:—Held: such labourer & foreman were fellow servants, & consequently no action was maintainable against the builders for the injury the labourer sustained from the fall, without negligence on their part in appointing the foreman; & notice to the general manager of the insufficiency of the materials for the construction of the scaffolding was not in contemplation of law notice to defts. so as to render them liable for an injury sustained by pltf. in consequence of the insufficiency of such materials.—LOVEGROVE v. LONDON, BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RY. 1678. Effect of knowledge of servant—When complaint made to master—Promise to repair.]—Where a servant, knowing of a defect in machinery he has to work in his master's employ, complains of it to him, but continues in the use of it, in the reasonable expectation of its being repaired, & an accident happens through its defective condition, he is not precluded from recovering against his master for negligence.

If knowledge may mean belief on sufficient grounds, as he [pltf.] had his master's assurance that the defect should be remedied, he might well be said to have had no knowledge at the time of the accident that the defect existed (WILLES, J.).—HOLMES v. WORTHINGTON (1861), 2 F. & F. 533.

1681. —— ——.]—(1) Pltf., a commercial traveller, was employed by defts., who were wholesale grocers. His duties were to travel round the district, show samples, take orders, & deliver goods, & for that purpose he was supplied by defts. with a motor car, the starting gear of which was defective. He complained of this on several occasions to defts., who admitted that it was defective but failed to remedy the defect. While pltf. was upon one of his journeys the car stopped &, in trying to restart it, he was severely injured. In an action brought by pltf. to recover damages in respect of personal injury resulting from the negligence of defts.:—Held: pltf., notwithstanding his knowledge of the defect in the starting gear, had never undertaken or consented to take upon himself the risks arising from continuing to use the car, he had sustained the injury owing to the personal negligence of the defts., & that, not having been guilty of contributory negligence, he was entitled to recover.

(2) The question is ever one of fact, namely, whether pltf. has voluntarily undertaken & contracted to accept the risk for himself (MCCARDIE, J.).

(3) A master may be liable for a danger or defect, causing hurt to his servant, not only where he knew but what he ought to have known of it. . . . I came to the conclusion upon the authorities that the first branch of the proposition in Griffiths v. London & St. Katharine Docks Co., No. 1665, ante, is not now law. A servant need not aver the actual knowledge of the danger or defect by his master. It suffices to allege that he knew or ought to have known (MCCARDIE, J.).

(4) I also think the second branch of the proposition in Griffiths v. London & St. Katharine Docks Co., No. 1665, ante, is to be treated as erroneous at the present day. It is, I feel, opposed to principle to say that because a servant knows of the defect he is therefore debarred from damages for injury through his master's negligence (MCCARDIE, J.).—BAKER v. JAMES, [1921] 2 K. B. 674; 90 L. J. K. B. 1190; 125 L. T. 414; 37 T. L. R. 591; 19 L. G. R. 551.

1682. —— When danger obvious.]—Pltf., a dock labourer in the employment of defts., a firm of stevedores, was, with other servants of defts., working on the loading of a ship in a dock. During the loading defts.' servants so blocked up the iron hold ladders that they could not be used, & in consequence some of them obtained from the ship a rope ladder which was fastened at the top of the coamings of the hatch & swung loose some feet from the bottom of the hold. Pltf. was going up this ladder when it swung & caught his hand between the ladder & the coamings, & in trying to free himself he fell to the bottom of the hold & was seriously injured. There was evidence that after the rope ladder had been supplied pltf. complained to defts.' foreman that the ladder was unsafe, & that one of defts. himself came & saw the ladder in use & did not interfere. Pltf. based his claim (a) on the ground that defts. were guilty of statutory negligence under reg. 6 of Part II. of the Order of 1904, under Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22); (b) on common law negligence. The judge held that the claim on ground (a) failed, as the statutory duty was imposed by the regulation upon the shipowners, & not on defts.; & also failed on ground (b) as defts. were not guilty of such negligence as to make them liable to pltf. On an appeal by pltf. on the second ground:—Held: when once it was ascertained that the original safe mode of access had gone, that another one of obvious danger had been substituted, & defts. had seen the obviously dangerous substitute & did not interfere, it followed that defts. were negligent, & were therefore responsible to pltf. for the accident.—MONAGHAN v. RHODES (W. C. Common Employment.

(a) In General.

1697. General rule—Common employment a good defence.]—(1) A master is not in general responsible to his servant for injury occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant while acting in one common service, provided the master shall have taken due care not to expose his servant to unreasonable risks. But, in such a case, the master is not exempt from responsibility where the servant injured was not at the time of the injury acting in the service of the master.

H., a servant of a railway co., in the discharge of his duty, was in a train under the guidance of others of their servants, & by the neglect of those servants, whilst they were engaged together in a common service, a collision took place, & H. was killed:—Held: his administratrix could not maintain an action against the co., under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93).

(2) A declaration under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), stated that H. was in the service of defts., & that, in the discharge of his duty as such servant, he became a passenger in a carriage of defts., drawn by a steam engine under the guidance of defts.; that defts. were possessed of another steam engine, which then was drawing other carriages, under the guidance of defts., by their servants; yet defts. conducted themselves so negligently in & about the guidance of the first-mentioned engine & carriage, & in & about the guidance of the other engine & carriages, that a collision took place, & H. was thereby killed. Plea, that the collision took place solely through the carelessness, negligence, etc., of the servants of defts.; & that the engines & carriages were under the guidance of the servants of defts., who were fit & competent persons to have the guidance of the same; & that the negligence was unauthorised by defts., & without their leave, licence or knowledge:—Held: no ground of action appeared on the face of the declaration, & the plea did not amount to the general issue.

(3) The principle upon which a master is in general liable to answer for accidents resulting from the negligence or unskilfulness of his servant, is, that the act of his servant is in truth his own act. . . . If instead of driving the carriage with his own hands, he employs his servant to drive it, the servant is but an instrument set in motion by the master. It was the master's will that the servant should drive; & whatever the servant does in order to give effect to his master's will may be treated by others as the act of the master: qui facit per alium, facit per se (ALDERSON, B.).

(4) Though a stranger may treat the act of the servant as the act of his master, yet the servant himself, by whose negligence or want of skill the accident has occurred, cannot, & therefore he cannot defend himself against the claim of a third person; nor, if by his unskilfulness he is himself injured, can he claim damages from his master upon an allegation that his own negligence was, in point of law, the negligence of his master (ALDERSON, B.).

(5) The difficulty is as to the principle applicable to the case of several servants employed by the same master, & injury resulting to one of them from the negligence of another. In such a case the master is not in general responsible when he has selected persons of competent care & skill (ALDERSON, B.).

(6) A servant, when he engages to serve a master undertakes, as between himself & his master, to run all the ordinary risks of the service, & this includes the risk of negligence on the part of a fellow servant, whenever he is acting in discharge of his duty as servant of him who is the common master of both (ALDERSON, B.).

(7) A master is not exempt from responsibility to his servant for an injury occasioned to him by the act of another servant, where the servant injured was not, at the time of the injury, acting in the service of his master. In such a case the

Co., & driven by one of their engine drivers, having been improperly & negligently shunted into a siding, injured pltf., a servant of the L. & N. W. Ry. Co., who was there engaged in cleaning carriages on such siding:—Held: the injury was caused by the negligence of the engine driver in the discharge of his ordinary duty to the G. W. Ry. Where two or more persons are servants of one master, or engaged in one common employment, the master is not liable in an action for any injury sustained by one servant by reason of any negligence of another servant engaged in the work or employment common to both, as incidental to the carrying on of the general business, or the operations in which the one & the other are engaged; & the ground on which these decisions have been pronounced is, that it must be presumed as true that the servant takes upon himself the risk of any injury he may sustain by the negligent behaviour of another servant, under the same master, in the same employment, & such risk is part of the consideration for wages he is entitled to receive (KELLY, C.B.).—WARBURTON v. GREAT WESTERN RY. At the trial of an action brought by pltf. against defts. to recover damages in respect of the injury so occasioned to her, evidence was given for pltf. of the above facts, but there was in effect no evidence to show how or by whose negligence, the accident was caused:—Held: the case came within the rule that a person employed impliedly undertakes, as incidental to his employment, the risk of negligence on the part of a fellow employee engaged in the same employment, & inasmuch as pltf. had adduced no evidence to show that the accident had been caused by the negligence of deft. co., or of any person for whose negligence they would be responsible, the action was not maintainable.

1731. ——.]—Where a master employs an inexperienced workman upon dangerous work it is his duty to instruct & caution him; but the master may delegate that duty to a competent person, &, if he does so, he will not be liable for an injury to the workman resulting from the negligence of the delegate in not properly instructing or cautioning him. There is no difference in this respect between an adult & an infant workman. Consequently, in an action for negligence against an employer by an infant who has been injured owing to the negligence of the employer's foreman in not fully instructing or cautioning him, it is open to the employers to raise the defence of common employment.

A contract of service is regarded as beneficial to an infant; & it is no objection that the contract contains stipulations & provisions usual in the particular trade, & such as a master may reasonably impose as a protection to himself (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—YOUNG v. HOFFMAN MANUFACTURING CO., LTD., [1907] 2 K. 1747. Necessity for relationship of master & servant at time of accident.]—(1) The liability or non-liability of a master to his workmen cannot depend upon the question whether the author of the accident is or is not in any technical sense the fellow workman or collaborator of the sufferer. The case of the fellow workman is an example of the rule, not the rule itself ; the rule stands on broader grounds. The master is not, & cannot be liable to his servant unless there be negligence on the part of the master in that in which he, the master, has contracted or undertaken with his servant to do. A master does not contract or undertake with his servant to execute in person the works connected with his business. What the master is bound to his servant to do in the event of his not personally superintending the work, is to select proper & competent persons to do so, & to furnish them with adequate materials & resources for the work. When he has done this, he has done all that he is bound to do ; & if the persons so selected are guilty of negligence, it is not the negligence of the master ; & if an accident occurs to a workman to-day in consequence of the negligence of another workman, skilful & competent, who was formerly, but is no longer, in the service of the master, the master is not liable, though the two workmen cannot technically be described as fellow workmen. A master cannot warrant the competency of his servants.

(2) The fact that the servant occasioning the injury is placed in authority, control, or superintendence of the others does not prevent the exoneration of the master from liability.—WILSON v. MERRY (1868), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 326 ; 19 L. T. 30 ; 32 J. P. 675, H. L.

1748. Whether in common employment.]—BARTONSHILL COAL CO. v. REID, No. 971, ante.

1749. ——.]—When two persons are working for the same master for a common general object, there is no liability upon the master to answer to either of them for damage resulting from the negligence of the other, although the actual piece of work on which they are engaged is not the same.

Pltf. was hired by a man, who had contracted to unload a coal barge at defts.' brewery, to assist in unloading; he was paid by defts., & defts. alone could discharge him. While employed in carrying coal he was injured through the negligence of defts.' servants, who were moving barrels in the brewery:—Held: there was evidence to justify a finding that pltf. was defts.' servant, he was engaged in a common employment with the person who caused the injury, & therefore, he could not recover.—CHARLES v. TAYLOR, WALKER & CO. 1750. —— When risk a natural consequence of employment.]—The rule which exempts a master from liability to his servant for injury arising to such servant from the negligence of his fellow servant employed with him for a common object, is not confined to a common immediate object, but embraces all cases where the risk of injury from the negligence of the one is so much a natural & necessary consequence of the employment which the other accepts that it must be included in the risks which are to be considered in his wages.

A carpenter employed to do work for a railway co., & amongst other things paint a shed at their station, is so necessarily brought into contact with the traffic of the line that risk of injury from the carelessness of porters employed to turn carriages on the turn-tables on the line is naturally incident to such an employment & within the rule.—MORGAN v. VALE OF NEATH RY. 1751. —— ——.]—The principle which exempts a master from liability to his servant for injury caused by the negligent act of a fellow servant or fellow workman, is, that the servant must be assumed to have contemplated & tacitly assented to encounter the ordinary risks incident to the service or employment, at the time of entering into the contract.

Pltf., who was a licenced waterman & lighterman, was in the employ at weekly wages of deft., a corn merchant & warehousekeeper, his ordinary duty being to attend at the waterside of the premises every tide for about an hour & a half before & after highwater, for the purpose of bringing barges to & from the wharf & there mooring & unmooring them. It was no part of his duty to load or unload the barges or to assist in any way in the work of the warehouse; but it was his habit to go to the office on the land side of the warehouse for orders, or when sent for by deft.'s manager. There were two ways of going there, viz., by landing from his boat at stairs at the end of the street next adjoining the warehouse, or by stepping from the barges into & going through the warehouse & out by a door to the street. He usually went by this latter way. Being on the barges at a time when his actual duty did not require him to be there, he was sent for to the office, & was proceeding thither by his accustomed route, when, in passing out from the warehouse door to the street, he was knocked down & injured by a sack of grain which another of deft.'s men was in a negligent manner hoisting by means of a crane from a waggon:—Held: this was an injury caused by the negligence of a fellow workman, within the above-mentioned exception, & consequently the master was not liable.

When a man enters into the service of a master, he tacitly agrees to take upon himself to bear all ordinary risks which are incident to his employment, & amongst others the possibility of injury happening to him from the negligent acts of his fellow servants or fellow workmen (ARCHIBALD, J.).—LOVELL v. HOWELL (1876), 1 C. Crews of different ships of same owner.]—A collision occurred in the river Thames, between two steamships, the Petrel & the Cormorant, belonging to the same owners, & the Cormorant sank, but there was no loss of life. In an action brought by some of the owners of cargo on board the Cormorant against the Petrel, the latter vessel was found alone to blame. Thereupon the owners of the Petrel instituted proceedings for limiting their liability to £5,658 5*s.* on 707·28 tons, being £8 per ton on the gross tonnage of the Petrel without deduction of engine room, but deducting 31·80 tons crew space under Merchant Shipping Act, 1867 (c. 127), s. 9, &, in respect of their claim for lost effects, making the master, officers, & crew of the Cormorant defts. with cargo owners & others On objection to the claim of the master, officers & crew of the Cormorant & to the deduction from the tonnage of the Petrel of the crew space:—Held: the master, officers, & crew of the Cormorant were entitled to claim against the fund in respect of their lost effects, for, though they had a common employer with the master, officers, & crew of the Petrel, in the sense that both crews were making money for him, they were not in common employment in the sense that injury from the negligence of one crew was an ordinary risk of the service of the other, for the safety of the crew of one of these two vessels did not depend on the skill & care of the crew of the other, more than on the skill & care of other vessels navigating the Thames.—THE PETREL, [1893] P. 320; 62 L. 1759. General rule.]—(1) The rule that a master is not liable to a servant for injuries sustained from the negligence of a fellow servant in their common employment, is not altered by the fact that the servant guilty of negligence is a servant of superior authority, whose lawful directions the other is bound to obey.

(2) Deft. was a maker of locomotive engines, & pltf. was in his employ. An engine was being hoisted, for the purpose of being carried away, by a travelling crane moving on a tramway resting on beams of wood supported by piers of brickwork. The piers had been recently repaired, & the brickwork was fresh. Deft. retained the general control of the establishment, but was not present; his foreman or manager directed the crane to be moved on, having just before ordered pltf. to get on the engine to clean it. Pltf. having got on the engine, the piers gave way, the engine fell, & pltf. was injured. This was the first time the crane had been used & pltf. employed in this manner:—Held: there was no evidence to fix deft. with liability to pltf.; for that, assuming the foreman to have been guilty of negligence on the present occasion, he was not the representative of the master so as to make his acts the acts of the master; he was merely a fellow servant of pltf., though with superior authority; & there was nothing to show that he was not a fit person to be employed as foreman; neither was there any evidence of personal negligence on the part of deft., as there was nothing to show that he had employed unskilful or incompetent persons to build the piers, or that he knew, or ought to have known, that they were insufficient.—FELTHAM v. ENGLAND (1866), L. 1761. Chief engineer.]—Pltf. shipped, under the ordinary articles, as engineer on board defts.' vessel, a screw steamer. During the voyage pltf. was required by the chief engineer to work a winch used to raise or lower the screw of the steamer. In so doing, & without any fault of pltf., one of the handles of the winch came off, & pltf. was severely injured. The handle ought to have been fastened on; & there was a screw on board for that purpose, but it had never been fastened, although the chief engineer had several times before the accident promised to have it done when spoken to on the subject:—Held: the chief engineer stood in the relation of fellow servant to pltf., & that there was nothing in the above facts to take the case out of the ordinary rule of non-responsibility of a master for injury to his servant from the negligence of a fellow servant & consequently deft. was not liable for the injury to pltf. either in an action for negligence or for breach of an implied undertaking to provide the ship, with good & sufficient machinery; the obligation implied by law not amounting to such an undertaking but only to take due care to provide proper machinery & competent servants to work it.—SEARLE v. LINDSAY (1861), 11 C. 1769. Necessity for control by common master.]—A person who is injured by the negligence of another's servant cannot be a fellow servant with the servant whose negligence causes the injury, so as to exempt the master from liability, unless he is under the control & orders of the master.

Defts. & the G. N. co. owned adjoining stations, which were worked by a "joint station staff," the cost of whose salaries was borne equally by the two cos. S., one of such staff, was hired by the G. N. co., & received his salary from them. While engaged in his duty as signalman, S. was killed by the negligence of defts.' engine driver:—Held: S. was not defts.' servant, so as to be a fellow servant with the engine driver; & therefore his widow could recover damages from defts. for his death.—SWAINSON v. NORTH EASTERN RY. 1770. —— Servant of contractor.]—Defts. having contracted with the Crystal Palace co. to erect a tower, manufactured the materials, & made a sub-contract with M. & other persons to do, by piece work particular portions of the hoisting & fixing the materials, the scaffolding & tools being provided by defts. The workmen employed by the sub-contractors were paid weekly, by defts. according to the time they worked, an account of which was kept by defts.' foreman. M., the sub-contractor employed W., pltf.'s husband; & whilst he was at work at the bottom of the tower, defts.' men, who were at work on the top, negligently let fall an instrument called a rymer which struck pltf.'s husband on the head, & caused his death:—Held: (1) the sub-contractor & his workmen were servants of defts., engaged in one common employment with their other servants, & consequently, defts. were not liable under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), for the injury caused by the negligence of the latter.

(2) A master is not responsible to one servant for an injury occasioned to him by the negligence of a fellow servant whilst they are acting in one common service; but this rule does not hold where the person doing the injury is not a person of ordinary skill & care.

(3) A servant may however decline any service in which he apprehends injury to himself.—WIGGETT v. FOX (1856), 11 Exch. 832; 25 L. J. Ex. 188; 26 L. T. O. S. 309; 2 Jur. N. S. 955; 4 W. R. 254; 156 E. R. 1069.

1773. —— ——.]—In an action to recover damages for injury caused by the negligence of the defendant's servant, the defence of common employment is not applicable unless the injured person & the servant whose negligence caused the injury were not only engaged in a common employment, but were in the service of a common master.

Builders contracted to build a block of houses, under a specification prepared by the owners' architect, certain fire proof portions of the houses to be executed by resps., who were iron founders. Resps. contracted with the architect to do their portion of the work, & had no contract with the builders & were not under their direction or control. While resps. were carrying out their contract workmen employed by them in raising concrete to the upper storey of the building negligently let a bucket fall on applt., who was working in the lower storey in the employment of the builders. In respect of the injury thus caused applt. brought an action against resps.:—Held: since the relation of master & servant did not exist between resps. & applt. the doctrine of collaborateur did not apply & the action was maintainable.

The general servant of A. may for a time or on a particular occasion be the servant of B., & a person who is not under any paid contract of service may nevertheless have put himself under the control of an employer to act in the capacity of servant, so as to be regarded as such. . . . It must be remembered that whilst a servant contracts with his master to bear the risks of the negligence of his fellow servants, there is, as has more than once been laid down, a corresponding duty on the part of the employer to take due care to select competent servants (LORD HERSCHELL).

The immunity extended to a master in the case of injuries caused to each other by his servants whilst they are working for him to a common end is an exception from the general rule, & rests upon an implied undertaking by the servant to bear the risks arising from the possible negligence of a fellow servant who has been selected with due care by his master (LORD WATSON).—JOHNSON v. LINDSAY & Co., [1891] A. 1783. —— ——.]—If a stranger invited by a servant to assist him in his work, is, while engaged in giving such assistance, injured by the negligence of another servant of the same master in the course of his employment, the stranger cannot hold the master responsible. The stranger, by volunteering his assistance, cannot impose upon the master a greater liability than that in which he stands towards his own servant; & if the master takes care that his servants are persons of competent skill & ordinary carefulness, he is not liable for any injury that one of them may receive from the negligence of another.—POTTER v. FAULKNER (1861), 1 B. & S. 800; 31 L. 1784. —— Stranger appealed to for information.]—A passer by who is casually appealed to by a workman for information respecting a thing which the latter is doing in a public thoroughfare, is not to be considered a volunteer assistant, so as to exonerate the workman's master from responsibility for an injury resulting to the former from the workman's negligent mode of doing the work.—CLEVELAND v. SPIER (1864), 16 C. 1785. —— Where common interest with master—Plaintiff assisting railway porter.]—Pltf. was the consignee of a heifer, which was to be carried by defts. & delivered at their station at Penrith. On the arrival of the loose box containing the heifer at the station, there was only one porter to shunt the box to a place where the heifer could be taken out. Pltf., therefore, with the assent of the station master, assisted in the shunting, & while so engaged was injured through the negligence of the co.'s servants:—Held: pltf. was not a mere licencee, nor was he in the position of a fellow servant. His true position was that of a consignee taking delivery from the co. in a manner assented to by the co., & as such was entitled to recover, if while so engaged he was injured by the negligence of the co.'s servants.—WRIGHT v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. 1786. —— —— Plaintiff assisting for benefit of own master.]—Pltf.'s employers engaged defts. to repair a linotype machine. Defts. sent one of their servants to the premises of pltf.'s employers for that purpose. Pltf., at the request of deft.'s servant, was assisting in the work when a chip of metal flew into his eye & injured him. In an action brought by pltf. to recover damages from defts. in respect of the injury, the jury found that defts.' servant was guilty of negligence in executing the work; that pltf. did not voluntarily assist defts.' servant for the benefit of defts., but that he assisted him for the benefit of his own employers in order to expedite the work:—Held: having regard to the findings of the jury, the doctrine as to common employment was not applicable, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—WILLIAMS v. LINOTYPE & MACHINERY, LTD. (1914), 84 L. J. K. B. 1620; 112 L. T. 558.

1787. —— —— Dancer attending rehearsals.]—Defts. had under agreement the use of Drury Lane Theatre for the production of a revue. Pltf., a principal dancer, attended rehearsals of the revue; she was under no contract with defts. to attend them & was not paid for her attendances, but attended in the hope & expectation of obtaining an employment for the run of the revue when it was ready for production. At one of the rehearsals a staircase which formed part of the scenery was fixed upon the stage by the direction of the producer of the revue, who was a servant of defts., in such a way as to be unsafe. Pltf., with others, took up a position on the staircase by the direction of the producer, when the staircase collapsed, with the result that pltf. sustained serious injuries, to recover damages for which she brought the present action. The jury found that pltf. was not in the employment of defts., & that the accident was caused by the negligence of one of their servants, & judgment was given against defts.:—Held: on the facts the finding of the jury that pltf. was not a servant of defts. was right; &, further, pltf. was not a mere volunteer who could not be in a better position to recover damages from defts. than their own servants, but was a volunteer in a service in which she had a common interest with defts., & therefore the doctrine of common employment had no application & pltf. was entitled to recover.—HAYWARD v. DRURY LANE THEATRE & MOSS' EMPIRES, [1917] 2 K. 1802. —— ——.]—After the passing of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108, special rules were framed & approved for the regulation of a coal mine, of which deft. was the proprietor & manager; by one of these rules for the direction of enginemen & banksmen, every morning, before any one descended the shaft, the cage by which they were let down was to be twice run slowly up & down, loaded, in order to test the sufficiency of the rope & tackling; this rule had been habitually neglected for many weeks, to deft.'s knowledge. One night the rope by which the cage was suspended, being before in good repair, was, as it was afterwards discovered, injured by an accidental fire in the mine; the next morning A., who was a miner employed by deft. in the colliery, & other miners, & who all knew of the rule for testing the rope, & of its being habitually violated, presented themselves at the pit to be let down to work, & there not having been any previous testing of the rope, etc., according to the rule, were told by the banksman that they had better examine the rope before they went down; they, however, got immediately into the cage, & the rope breaking as they descended they were all killed. An action having been brought by A.'s representative against deft.:— Held: the action was not maintainable, for A.'s own negligence had materially contributed to the accident. Semble: but for deceased's negligence, deft., notwithstanding deceased & the banksman were both employed by deft. in the colliery as fellow labourers, would have been liable by reason of his personal negligence in neglecting the rule & keeping in his employ a banksman who he knew habitually violated it.—SENIOR v. WARD (1859), 1 E. & E. 385; 28 L. 1805. —— ——.]—In an action against an employer, for an injury caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, in the position of a foreman, the negligence imputed to the employer being, the employment of a person not of competent skill to direct the work, although evidence that the work required skill, & was being done unskilfully & improperly under his direction, may be some evidence that it was improper to employ him to direct it, it is evidence so slight as to be scarcely sufficient, & is amply met by positive evidence that persons of knowledge deemed him a person of competent skill & experience.

The master is not liable to one of his servants for the consequence of the negligence of another, unless he himself, the master, has been guilty of personal negligence. That is, some particular negligence. It is not enough to infer or presume negligence on his part from the negligence of the servant; but some particular negligence on the part of the master must be shown. This principle has been applied to cases like the present, where the injury is suggested to have arisen from the negligence of a fellow servant in the position of a foreman or manager (CROMPTON, J.).—EDWARDS v. LONDON & BRIGHTON RY. 1809. —— ——.]—(1) The husband of pursuer was killed by an outbreak of poisonous gas while working in the employment of defenders, a limited co., in a coal mine of which they were owners. In an action for damages at common law & alternatively under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), the sheriff-substitute found that defenders were liable inasmuch as they had failed to appoint officials competent for the working of the mine, & he assessed the damages at £400. On appeal the ct. of sess. held that defenders were not liable at common law, having used reasonable care in appointing managers of the necessary qualification & experience; that although there had been a breach of the special rules applicable to the mine under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 49, these rules prescribed the duties of the managers & firemen & imposed no duties directly on the owners of the mine; but, that defenders were liable under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), in respect of the negligence of their servants & their failure to comply with the rules in question, & the ct. awarded as damages £282:—Held: there was a duty on defenders as owners of the mine to appoint & keep in charge persons competent to deal with the dangers arising in the mine; they had not discharged this duty, & were therefore liable at common law for the sum awarded by the sheriff-substitute.

1818. ——.]—The breach of a statutory duty by an employer is not one of the risks which a servant must be assumed to have undertaken to run when he entered the employers' service, & therefore, where an employer has employed an unqualified person in breach of his statutory duty, he cannot rely on the defence of common employment, in the case of an accident to a servant caused, or contributed to, by the conduct of such unqualified person.

A railway co. employed a person who had not passed the tests required by an order of the Railway Comrs. which had the force of a statute, to work a train. He allowed the train to run past danger signals, & an accident resulted :—Held : there was evidence that the breach of the statutory duty caused, or contributed to, the accident.—JONES v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. 1819. Master acting as fellow servant.]—(1) The principle that a servant sustaining an injury from the negligence of a fellow servant while engaged in the common employment cannot recover in an action against the common master, does not exempt from liability to action a master who himself takes part in the servant's work, & whilst so doing injures the servant through negligence.

(2) If the master is a member of a partnership by whom the servant is employed, & the work in which he so takes part is within the scope of the common undertaking of the partnership, his co-partners are jointly liable with him for the injury thus caused to the servant by his negligence.—ASHWORTH v. STANWIX (1861), 3 E. & E. 701; 30 L. 1820. Servant acting as master's deputy—Foreman—Dangerous machinery.]—The absence of proper means for stopping the machine could not alone sustain the action; the delay in stopping the machine could only have aggravated the injury & could not have caused it. . . . The foreman was put by defts. in their place to employ this young person in & about dangerous machinery of which she was quite ignorant, & any negligence of his in the matter would be negligence for which they would be responsible. There is evidence both of negative & positive negligence on his part, negative, in not giving the girl proper instructions as to the use of the machine, positive in expressly directing her to do the very thing she had done, & which it was admitted was dangerous, so dangerous, indeed, that the case for the defence was, that she had been told not to do it. . . . If the owners of dangerous machinery, by their foreman, employ a young person about it quite inexperienced in its use, either without proper directions as to its use or with directions which are improper & which are likely to lead to danger, of which the young person is not aware, & of which they are aware; as it is their duty to take reasonable care to avert such danger, they are responsible for any injury which may ensue from the use of such machinery (COCKBURN, C.J.).—GRIZZLE v. FROST (1863), 3 F. & F. 622, N. 1821. —— —— Match factory.]—A boy employed in a lucifer match factory was killed by the explosion of certain materials which he was engaged in stirring, his father having expressly contracted with the master that he should not be put to such work, which was very dangerous. In an action by the father against the master under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), it was stated by a girl employed in the factory, that the foreman was absent, & that during his absence D. acted as manager, but there was no other evidence on this point. D. had been stirring, & was present while the boy was stirring the mixture which exploded :—Held : to take the case out of the principle of the cases in which a master is held not to be responsible to his servants for the negligence of fellow servants, it should have been shown that D. was placed by the master in his place to represent him as vice-principal; the statement of the girl was no evidence that he was so placed, & he was therefore a fellow workman

1823. Statutory employment—Employment of pauper by guardians.]—The employment of a pauper set to work by the guardians of the poor under the powers given to them by the Poor Law Acts & Orders is not contractual, but statutory, & therefore the defence of common employment is no answer to an action by a pauper so employed against the guardians to recover damages for injury suffered in such employment through the negligence of an officer of the guardians. The jury (inter alia) found that the employers were not guilty of negligence in supplying the club, that the employers' stage manager was guilty of negligence, & that the employers were not negligent in employing the stage manager:—Held: on these findings, the fact of the stage manager's negligence being in respect of the supply of appliances did not in the circumstances exclude the application of the doctrine of common employment, & deft. employers were not liable to pltf.—LAUBACH v. CO-OPTIMISTS ENTERTAINMENT SYNDICATE, LTD. 1826. Employment terminated on Saturday—Returning for tools on Monday—Accident on the Monday.]—By the rules of a mine workmen upon their discharge were not entitled to receive their wages until they had returned the tools the property of the mine owner. A miner was discharged on a Saturday, & had no opportunity to go down for his tools on that day. On the following Monday he went down the pit to get the tools & was injured:—Held: he was at the time of the injury acting in the employment of the mine owner.—COWLER v. MORESBY COAL CO. 1827. Loan of workman.]—In an action for compensation for personal injury founded on above Act, s. 1 (3), the negligence must be proved of a person in the employ of deft. to whose orders or directions pltf. was bound to conform; & it must further be proved that the injury to pltf. resulted from his having conformed to those orders or directions; but it is not essential to show that such conformity to the orders or directions was the causa causans of the injury. Pltf. was in the employ of certain builders who were erecting a house in which an hydraulic lift was being constructed by defts. D. was employed by defts. in constructing the lift, & was the only person on the premises for that purpose. D. asked the foreman of the builders to lend him a workman to assist him in work connected with the lift, & the foreman lent him pltf. While pltf. was so assisting D. he was directed by D. to place a plank across the well of the lift, one end resting on a crate on the landing & the other on the balance-weight of the lift. Pltf. did so, & D. then told him to stand on the plank; whilst both D. & pltf. were on the plank, the former pulled the rope, & thus started the lift. D. immediately jumped off, but pltf. had not time to do so before the plank tilted up. In order to save himself from falling down the well of the lift, he had no alternative but to cling to one of the pulley ropes of the lift, & was drawn up to the top girders & his hands were crushed. Pltf. sued defts. for compensation under above Act:—Held: pltf. was a workman of defts.; D. was a person to whose orders or directions pltf. was bound to conform within above Act, s. 1 (3); the injury to pltf. was caused by the negligence of D.; & defts. were consequently liable.—WILD v. WAYGOOD, [1892] 1 Q. On the occasion of the accident the scaffolding erected by deft. was in a manifestly unsafe state, & the defect in it was known to deft. or his superintendent, & S. knew that it was so known to them. S., notwithstanding the defect, ascended a ladder to finish the slating, but the scaffolding gave way, & S., who was on the ladder at the time, fell to the ground sustaining injuries from which he died:—Held: (1) deceased was a workman within above Act, s. 8; (2) although deceased was aware of the defect in the scaffolding, yet, as he knew that deft. or his superintendent was aware of it also, above Act, s. 2 (3), would enable pltf. to recover compensation for his death. Semble: contributory negligence is a defence under above Act as before.—STUART v. EVANS (1883), 49 L. 1834. —— —— Chargeman in coal mine.]—By the special rules of a colliery made, under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 51, the manager of the mine was made responsible for the control, management & direction of the mine, & was to appoint such competent persons as might be necessary for carrying out the provisions of the Act & all persons employed in or about the mine were to obey his directions; & the chargeman in each shift was to have charge of the sinking operations. E. entered into a contract with the owners of the colliery to sink a shaft in their coal mine. By the contract E., who was therein called the contractor, was to provide such sinkers, etc., as might be necessary for the execution of the work, & was to be paid a certain sum per fathom sunk. E. employed & paid the sinkers, he himself acting as "chargeman" in charge of the sinking operations. One of the sinkers, while engaged upon the work, was killed by a block of wood falling upon him & his administratrix brought an action against the colliery owners under Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (s. 96), to recover damages for his death:—Held: (1) E. was an independent contractor; (2) deceased was not a "workman" who had entered into or worked under a contract with the colliery owners as his employers within the Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 10, & therefore Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), did not apply; (3) the control given by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), & by the special rules of the mine, to the manager over all persons in the mine did not make E. & the sinkers employed by him "workmen" in the employment of the colliery owners within Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 10.—MARROW v. FLIMBY & BROUGHTON MOOR COAL & FIRE BRICK CO., [1898] 2 Q. 1835. —— —— Servant of.]—The owners of a colliery entered into an agreement with a contractor by which the latter contracted to sink & wall a shaft in the colliery. One of the workmen employed upon the work by the contractor, & paid by him, was fatally injured by an explosion of gas in the mine. Deceased had, like all the other men employed by the contractor, signed the "record book" kept by the colliery owners, by which, in consideration of being employed in the mine, he became bound to observe the regulations & conditions laid down for the safety of the mine & for the guidance of the persons employed therein. The administrator of deceased having brought an action against the colliery owners under above Act to recover damages for his death:—Held: the signature of the conditions by deceased did not create a contract of service between him & the colliery owners; deceased was not a "workman" who had entered into or worked under a contract with the colliery owners as his employers within Employers & Workmen Act, 1875 (c. 90), s. 10, & above Act did not therefore apply.—FITZPATRICK v. EVANS & CO., [1902] 1 K. to a workman for personal injury caused to him by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways connected with or used in the business of the employer. Pltf. was employed as a steam hammerman in the service of defts., a firm of engineers, upon whose premises was a large covered workshop about 150 feet long & 50 feet wide, over the floor of which were scattered certain machinery & other appliances used in their business. Near the centre of the workshop was a well with a cover which had not been used for about seven years. Pltf. who worked at one end of the workshop, whilst walking across it to make some inquiry of a workman at the other end with regard to the steam power, fell into the well, which had been uncovered by defts.' foreman for the purpose of emptying water from an iron cylinder into it. There was no defined way where pltf. crossed, but he went the most direct line across the workshop. Defts.' workmen also used to pass up & down the workshop. No warning was given by the foreman that the well had been uncovered. In an action under above Act to recover damages for the injury sustained:—Held: the place where the accident happened was a "way" within sect. 1 of the Act; the accident was not caused by "any defect in the condition of the way" within sect. 1 (1), but was caused by the negligence of defts.' foreman in the user of the way within sect. 1 (2).—WILLETTS v. WATT & CO., [1892] 2 Q. 1870. —— —— Plank thrown down by workman.]—During the building of a house the workmen obtained access to the upper part by ladders placed in a well intended for a staircase. There was another well through the house intended for a lift, down which rubbish had been thrown during the building. Upon the staircase being completed it was closed to the workmen as a means of access, & the ladders were transferred to the lift well. No precautions had been taken to prevent workmen from throwing rubbish down the lift well after the ladders had been so transferred. Pltf. was ascending one of the ladders when a boy threw a plank down from the third floor, which struck pltf. & broke his collar-bone:—Held: this was not a "defect in the condition of the way" within above Act; & the fact of no notice or warning being given to stop the practice of throwing materials down the lift hole did not have the effect of bringing the case within sect. 1 (1).—PEGRAM v. DIXON (1886), 55 L. The term "works" is not confined to factories, workshops or permanent premises of an employer.

1884. Apparatus used for carrying on business—All goods & chattels—Except stock-in-trade.]—In an action to recover compensation under above Act, it appeared that pltf. was in the employment of deft., who was a wharfinger, & for the purposes of his business the owner of carts & horses. It was the duty of pltf. to drive the carts & to load & unload the goods which were carried in them. Among the horses was one of a vicious nature & unfit to be driven even by a careful driver. Pltf. objected to drive this horse, & told the foreman of the stable that it was unfit to be driven, to which the foreman replied that pltf. must go on driving it, & that if any accident happened his employer would be responsible. Pltf. continued to drive the horse, & while sitting on his proper place in the cart was kicked by the animal, & his leg was broken:—Held: (1) pltf. was a "workman" within the definition in sect. 8 of above Act; (2) the horse which injured pltf. was "plant" used in the business of deft. & the vice in the horse was a "defect" in the condition of such plant, within sect. 1 of above Act.

There is no definition of plant in the Act; but in the ordinary sense it includes whatever apparatus is used by a business man for carrying on his business, not his stock-in-trade . . . but all goods & chattels, fixed or movable, live or dead, which he keeps for permanent employment in his business (LINDLEY, L.J.).

The foreman gave orders that it should not be used again, & it was being removed with his sanction by pltf. & others to a corner of defts.'s works, when part of it became detached & fell, & injured pltf.:—Held: (1) there was evidence that the machine was "plant connected with the business" of defts. within above Act, s. 1 (1); (2) there was evidence that pltf. had been injured by the negligence of the foreman, being "a person in the service of the defts. to whose orders the workman was bound to conform" within above Acts, s. 1 (3).—THOMPSON v. CITY GLASS BOTTLE CO., [1902] 1 K. Part of the tackle used for the unloading was supplied by the ship, & the accident was caused by a defect in this part of the tackle. The workman having brought an action in the county ct. against the stevedore for compensation under above Act, the judge withdrew the case from the jury on the ground that the stevedore was not responsible for a defect in the ship's tackle, & his decision was affirmed by the Div. Ct.:—Held: the stevedore owed a duty to the workman to take reasonable care in seeing that this tackle was in proper condition, & the action must be sent back for a new trial. If the employer uses hired plant without inquiry or inspection there is primâ facie evidence to go to the jury of negligence.—BIDDLE v. HART, [1907] 1 K. B. 649; 76 L. J. K. B. 418; 97 L. One of their agents, W., had a gang unloading the Bluebell, amongst whom was pltf. C. Owing to the hold of the Bluebell not being properly ventilated there was an accumulation of gas, & when the hatch was removed a violent explosion took place, & pltf. was injured:—Held: the injury was caused by the defective "plant" of defts.—CARTER v. CLARKE (1898), 78 L. He had been employed by them for eight years as a millwright's labourer, & had met with his death by falling into the pit where the machinery was sunk. His superior officer, N., had ordered him constantly to oil the machinery in the pit, to which there had been no railing. Pltf. having had judgment in the county ct., defts. had obtained a rule nisi to set aside the judgment, on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence in them or N., & that deceased had voluntarily undertaken work of a dangerous character:—Held: there had been evidence of negligence by defts., & although the county ct. judge had failed to ask the jury if the pit for the machinery was a "wheel-race" under Factories Act, 1878 (c. 16), s. 52, the rule nisi to set aside the judgment must be discharged.—CHAPMAN v. NITRO-PHOSPHATE CO. The unguarded condition of this wheel & the possible danger likely to arise from it were within the knowledge of the employers. A boy who fed the machine with leather by some means entangled his hand in this wheel & received injuries:—Held: taking sects. 1 (1) & 2 (1) of above Act together, the danger caused by this wheel was a defect in the condition of the machine within the first of these sub-sects. since, the danger being within the knowledge of the employers, they were negligent in allowing the wheel to remain unguarded.—MORGAN v. HUTCHINS (1890), 59 L. Deft. had provided the saw with a sufficient guard or fence under the bench for the prevention of accidents. The guard was movable for the purpose of removing the sawdust which collected under the bench. The sawyer for his own purposes improperly removed the guard, & whilst the guard was off pltf. fell against the saw & was injured:—Held: the absence of the guard was a defect in the condition of the machinery within above Act, s. 1 (1).—TATE v. LATHAM & SON, [1897] 1 Q. In an action to recover damages under above Act, upon the ground that there was a defect in the condition of the machine, in that it was not properly fenced, the county ct. judge found that there was a defect in the machine in that, although perfectly made & not requiring a guard, it was a dangerous machine, & that being so it was the duty of deft. to instruct those who used it as to its dangers, there being no foreman to do so, & that he had failed in that duty:—Held: this did not constitute a defect in the condition of the machine within above Act & deft. was entitled to judgment.—GREENWOOD v. GREENWOOD (1907), 97 L. Above Act which gives a workman a right of action against his employer for personal injury by reason of any defect in the condition of the machinery used in the business of the employer, applies to a case where the machine, though not defective in its construction, was, under the circumstances in which it was used, calculated to cause injury to those using it. Deceased, a workman in the employment of defts., was killed by a piece of coke falling from a lift used at a blast furnace belonging to them. The lift consisted of two platforms which ascended & descended alternately, & at the time when deceased was injured he was removing empty barrows from the platform which was at rest at the bottom of the lift. There was evidence that the accident arose either from the sides of the lift not being fenced so as to prevent coke from falling over, or from the lower platform not being roofed so as to protect those working on it from falling coke:—Held: under the circumstances there was a "defect in the condition" of the lift for which defts. were liable.—HESKE v. SAMUELSON (1883), 12 Q. 1903. —— No part unsound.]—Above Act which gives a workman a right of action against his employer for personal injury by reason of any defect in the condition of the plant used in the business of the employer, applies to a case where the plant is unfit for the purpose for which it is used, though no part of it is shown to be unsound. Pltf., a workman in defts.' employment, was injured by reason of the breaking of a ladder, which was being used to support a scaffold. The ladder was insufficient for the purpose for which it was being used, & the scaffold & ladder had been placed & were being used under the directions of one of defts.:—Held: under the above circumstances, there was evidence that pltf. had been injured by reason of a defect in the condition of the plant, owing to the negligence of his employer, within above Act.—CRIPPS v. JUDGE (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 583; 53 L. J. Q. B. 517; 51 L. T. 182; 49 J. P. 100; 33 W. R. 35, C. A.

1904. Mere danger from use.]—The mere fact that a machine is dangerous to a workman employed to work with it does not show that there is a defect in the condition of the machine within above Act, s. 1 (1), inasmuch as by sect. 2 (1) of the Act the only defects in respect of which the employer is liable are defects implying negligence of the employer or some one in his service entrusted by him with the duty of seeing that the machine is in proper condition. Pltf. in an action under above Act was employed by defts. to work at a carding machine. Part of the machine consisted of a wheel or pulley upon which, while in motion, pltf. had to place a band. The disc of the wheel had holes in it, &, while pltf. was putting on the band, his thumb slipped through one of these holes, the result being that it was caught between the wheel & the bed plate of the machine & cut off. It was proved that, though these wheels were sometimes made without such holes, they were very commonly made with them, the object being to reduce the weight of the wheel & consequent friction. In defts.' mill there were machines of both sorts, & it did not appear that any complaint had previously arisen with regard to the wheels with holes, pltf. himself stating that he had never complained of the machine because it had never entered into his head that it was dangerous:—Held: there was no evidence of any defect in the machine implying negligence in defts. or anyone in their service, & therefore defts. were not liable.

It must be a defect in the original construction or subsequent condition of the machine rendering it unfit for the purposes to which it is applied when used with reasonable care & caution, & a defect arising from the negligence of the employer (LOPES, L.J.).—WALSH v. WHITELEY (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 371; 57 L. J. Q. B. 586; 53 J. P. 38; 36 W. R. 876; 4 T. L. R. 694, C. A.

1905. Reasonable fitness to secure safety.]—Defect in the condition of machinery for the purpose of above Act, s. 1 (1), means the absence of reasonable fitness to secure safety in the operation for which it is intended.

An employer who uses an arrangement of machinery, not in itself defective, the handling of which, as he knows, is entrusted to such men as stevedores' labourers, is not entitled to have excluded from the consideration of its "reasonable fitness" an obvious chance of danger through their want of care.

The absence, in the conditions of the machinery taken as a whole, of any sufficient safeguard against danger arising from an ordinary & probable occurrence, as a slip in the management of a winch, is a defect.—STANTON v. SCRUTTON & SONS (1893), 62 L. J. Q. B. 405; 9 T. L. R. 236; 5 R. 244, D. C.

In doing this pltf. lost three fingers. The defect had been pointed out to defts., who to remedy it procured a roller in one piece; but the accident happened before the new roller was placed. The maker swore that, with care, both rollers were equally safe. The jury having found that

Inside this van were three large iron window-frames, which were placed upright in the van, & were secured in that position by two pieces of string, one piece being tied at each end round the hoops supporting the covering of the van. H. commenced unloading the frames by untying the string near the tail end of the van, & pltf., who was inside at the front of the van, untied the other string. H. then pulled one of the frames away without retying the other two, leaving them standing. Directly afterwards the two frames fell upon pltf., inflicting upon him severe injuries. Pltf. stated that he untied the string at one end without any orders from H., because he, pltf., had done so on other occasions, & that H. saw him untie it & made no objection. 1958. Contributory negligence of employee.]—Pltf., by next friend, sued defts. under above Act, 1880, for damages sustained through the negligence of their foreman. Pltf., a vanguard in the service of defts., was at the time of the accident under the age of fifteen. There was a rule of the co. known to pltf. that no vanguard under the age of fifteen was ever to drive a van. Defts.' foreman, on the occasion in question ordered pltf. to drive a van load of fish to B. market, & he would be paid extra money for so doing. The boy did drive the van, & in consequence was thrown down from his seat & seriously injured. Pltf. at the trial was nonsuited on the ground that he was offered & accepted extra money to drive, & was not obliged to obey in that respect the foreman who offered the money. Pltf. obtained a rule nisi for a new trial:—Held: pltf. had been rightly nonsuited, 1960. —— ——.]—Pltf. was employed by deft., the owner of a saw-mill, containing saws driven by steam power, & on a certain day he was told by deft.'s foreman to cut some wood in specified lengths with the circular saw. This work was generally performed by two men, one "feeding" the saw & the other taking the wood out from it. A. was engaged by deft. to attend to the engine & boiler, & to assist generally in the saw-mill, & was also told "not to neglect the engine." At the time in question pltf. was at one end of the saw frame pushing the wood through it, & A. was at the other end receiving the wood coming out from the saw. Hearing steam blowing off, A. suddenly & without notice to pltf., let go the wood & ran to the engine room, whereupon the wood, becoming unsteady, shook pltf.'s hand against the saw, which cut & injured his fingers:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, on the ground that, although the injury was caused by "the act or omission" of A. in leaving the saw without notice to pltf., there was no evidence that such "act or omission" was "done or made in obedience to any rule or bye-law of the employer, or to instructions by any delegate of his."—WHATLEY v. HOLLOWAY (1890), 62 L. 1962. "Charge or control of" train—Capstan man on goods siding.]—H., who was in the employ of a railway co. as a "capstan man," without giving the usual warning, propelled a series of trucks along a line of rails in a goods station, & injured pltf., who was engaged in similar work at the other end of the line about 100 yards off. The capstan was set in motion by hydraulic power communicated to it by H. from a stationary engine at a distance:—Held: there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that H. was a person who had the charge or control of "a train upon a railway" under above Act, s. 1 (5).—COX v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 106; 47 J. P. 116; 30 W. R. 816, D. C.

1963. —— Fireman scotching uncoupled wagon.]—Above Act by s. 1 (5), enacts that where personal injury is caused to a workman by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer "who has the charge or control of any . . . locomotive engine or train upon a railway, there shall be the same right of compensation against the employer as if the workman had not been in his service. A "person who has the charge or control of a train" does not necessarily cease to have charge of it, within the meaning of the Act, because some of the carriages are uncoupled from one another & from the engine in order that they may be separately dealt with, & those words do not necessarily point only to one person who is in charge of the whole train, but may include persons who have duties to perform in respect of parts of the train.

An engine driver, employed with his fireman in the discharge of loaded wagons on a railway, took a locomotive engine & several wagons to a point on an incline, & there proceeded with the engine & one of the wagons to the place of discharge, intending to return for the other wagons in due course. The fireman uncoupled the remaining wagons & scotched them to prevent them running down the incline. One of the wagons broke away, ran down the incline, & killed a workman in the service of the same employers. There was evidence that the method of scotching adopted was unsafe & was known to & approved by the engine driver. The representative of deceased having brought an action for compensation against the employers:—Held: there was evidence for the jury that the death was caused by reason of the negligence of a person who had the charge or control of a train within above Act, since either the engine driver had the charge or control, or the fireman had, & there was evidence of negligence in both.—MCCORD v. CAMMELL & CO., [1896] A. "Railway"—Temporary railway for construction of works.]—The meaning of the term "railway" as used in above Act, s. 1 (5), is not confined to railways belonging to railway cos. such as are subject to the provisions of the Railways Regulation Acts; but the sub-sect. applies also to a temporary railway laid down by a contractor for the purposes of the construction of works.—DOUGHTY v. FIRBANK (1883), 10 Q. 1967. "Locomotive"—Steam crane on temporary rails.]—In extending a railway a temporary line of rails was laid down on which a steam crane worked for moving & raising stones for builders:—Held: the crane was not a locomotive on a railway, & therefore a workman injured by negligence of driver of crane was not entitled to compensation from the common master.—MURPHY v. WILSON & SON (1883), 52 L. 1968. "Charge or control of points"—Control must be actual—Workman employed to oil & adjust.]—In an action for compensation under above Act, the evidence showed that it was the duty of F., a workman employed in the signal department of defts.' railway, to clean, oil, & adjust the points & wires of the locking apparatus

C. Volenti non fit injuria.

See, generally, NEGLIGENCE.

1973. General rule.]—To bring a pltf. suing under Employers' Liability Act within the maxim volenti non fit injuria, it is not sufficient to show that he had gone on with his work; it must be shown that he was perfectly contented to go on with his work, that he made no complaint, but understood & acquiesced in the danger.—BACON v. DAWES & CO. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 557, D. C.

1974. ——.]—Where a workman knows of a defect in the condition of his employer's plant, & notwithstanding such knowledge still continues to use the plant, there is some evidence to warrant a jury in finding that he voluntarily incurred the risk thereby occasioned; so disentitling him to recover compensation for injuries caused by such defect.—CHURCH v. APPLEBY BROTHERS (1888), 58 L. J. Q. B. 144; 60 L. T. 542; 5 T. L. R. 88, D. C.

1975. ——.]—It seems to me that the law is now settled that the mere fact of a workman undertaking that which he knows to be dangerous is not of itself conclusive proof that he has brought himself within the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria. It must depend in each case, upon the nature of the risk to the workman in connection with it, as well as upon considerations which must vary according to the circumstances of each case (A. L. SMITH, J.). —GREENHALGH v. CWMAMAN COAL CO. (1891), 8 T. L. R. 31, D. C.

1976. Whether maxim applicable under Act.]—(1) Pltf. was employed in a cooling room in deft.'s brewery. In the room were a boiling vat, & a cooling vat, & between them ran a passage which was in part only 3 feet wide. The cooling vat had a rim raised 16 inches above the level of the passage, but it was not fenced or railed in. Pltf. went along this passage to pull a board from under the boiling vat. This board stuck fast & then came away suddenly so that he fell back into the cooling vat & was scalded. In an action under above Act:—Held: the defence arising from the maxim volenti non fit injuria had not been affected by above Act, & applied to the present case, & there was therefore no evidence of negligence arising from a breach of duty on the part of deft. towards pltf., & pltf. was not entitled to recover.

(2) By entering into a contract of service the common law inferred that he had taken on himself the ordinary risks incident to such business as was lawfully carried on upon his master's premises (BOWEN, L.J.).

1983. Whether amounting to contributory negligence—Master also aware of defect.]—STUART v. EVANS, No. 1838, ante.

1984. —— ——.]—The meaning of above Act, sect. 1, as qualified by sect. 2, is that a workman, when he sues his master under the provisions of the statute, shall be in the position of one of the public suing, & shall not be in the position in which a servant before the passing of the statute was placed when he sued his master; in other words, that the master shall have all the defences he theretofore had against any of the public suing him, but shall not have the special defences he theretofore had when sued by his servant. Accordingly, the defence of contributory negligence is still open to an employer; but the defence of common employment, & also the defence that the workman had contracted to take upon himself the known risks attending the service, are taken away from him when sued by a workman under the above statute. But while these two defences are taken away, an employer may, when sued for a defect in the plant or machinery, set up as a statutory defence, under sect. 2 (3), that the servant knew of the defect & did not communicate it to the employer or to some other person superior to himself in the service of the employer.

W., whilst employed in deft.'s brewery, went to a valve in the engine room for the purpose of turning on steam to a donkey engine. The valve could only be reached by ascending a ladder resting upon a pipe, which was not level, & on which the ladder could not safely rest. W. was found dead on the floor, having apparently, whilst ascending the ladder, lost his balance from the ladder having shifted owing to the inequality of the pipe against which it rested. The ladder was perfect, though without any hooks or stays, but, placed as it was, was manifestly a most dangerous method of getting at the valve. Both W. & others among deft.'s workmen had frequently ascended the ladder before, for the purpose of turning off the valve, without accident. W.'s widow having brought an action against the defendant under above Act:—Held: (1) upon the above facts there was a defect in the condition of the plant within above Act, sect. 1 (1); & although W. knew of the defect, he was excused from informing deft. of it, being aware that deft. knew of it; (2) the mere fact that deceased knew that the work on which he was engaged was manifestly dangerous did not of itself constitute contributory negligence.—WEBLIN v. BALLARD (1886), 17 Q. R. had, nevertheless proceeded to where H. was lying, & on returning with H.'s body had himself been killed by the gas. R. had gone on the occasion in question to a part of the mine where he had not been sent by any superior servant of his employer:—Held: the fact that R., after he had been affected by the gas, persisted in his attempt to rescue H. was no evidence of his having been guilty of contributory negligence.—ROEBUCK v. NORWEGIAN TITANIC CO. SUB-SECT. 9.—NOTICE OF INJURY.

See Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), ss. 4, 7.

1988. Necessity for—Employer in possession of all particulars.]—(1) In order to maintain an action against an employer under above Act, the workman must in all cases give a written notice, within the time specified in sect. 4, containing his name & address, the cause of the injury, & the date at which it was sustained. The necessity for such written notice is not dispensed with by the fact that the employer is already in possession of all the particulars required by sect. 7 to be contained in the notice.

(2) Above Act, sect. 4, merely deals with the time within which a notice must be given. Sect. 7 contains the requisites of such notice.—MOYLE v. JENKINS (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 116; 51 L. J. Q. B. 112; 30 W. R. 324, D. C.

Where a workman, on the day he had been injured, made a verbal report of such injury to his employer's inspector, who took the details down in writing & sent them to the employer's superintendent, & afterwards the workman's solr. wrote a letter to the employer, stating that he was instructed by such workman to apply for compensation for injuries received on the employer's premises, "particulars of which have already been communicated to your superintendent":—Held: such letter did not refer to any other writing, & was not a notice in compliance with the Act.—KEEN v. MILLWALL DOCK CO. 1993. —— Particulars required substantially conveyed—Technical language unnecessary.]—The notice under above Act, s. 7, need not be expressed in strictly technical language: it is enough if it substantially conveys to the mind of the person to whom it is given, the name & address of the person injured & the cause & date of the injury. A letter from pltf.'s solr. gave only the date of the injury, & stated that pltf. was & had for some time past been under treatment at a hospital "for injury to his leg":—Held: having regard to the proviso at the end of sect. 7 the defect in the notice did not render it invalid.—STONE v. HYDE (1882), 9 Q. 1995. "Defect or inaccuracy"—Omission—Date of injury.]—Above Act, s. 4, provides that an action to recover compensation under the Act shall not be maintainable unless notice of injury is given as provided by the Act. By sect. 7, the notice shall state (inter alia) the date of the injury; & "a notice under this sect. shall not be deemed invalid by reason of any defect or inaccuracy therein" unless the judge who tries the action shall be of opinion that deft. is prejudiced in his defence by such defect or inaccuracy, & that it was for the purpose of misleading. A notice of injury given under sect. 4 omitted to state the date of the injury, & the judge at the trial found that deft. was not prejudiced in his defence by the omission, & that it was not for the purpose of misleading:—Held: the omission of the date was a "defect or inaccuracy" in the notice within above Act, s. 7, & therefore did not render the notice invalid.—CARTER v. DRYSDALE (1883), 12 Q. The accident occurred on Aug. 9. The letter giving notice was served on defts. by post by an unregistered letter on Sept. 19 & to this letter defts. replied on Sept. 23. The county ct. judge, before whom the action was tried, found that defts. had not been prejudiced in their defence by the defects & inaccuracy in the notice, & that such defects & inaccuracy were not for the purpose of misleading. It was proved that the notice was posted on Sept. 19:—Held: (1) the county ct. judge having found that defts. were not prejudiced in their defence by the said defects & inaccuracy in the notice, & they were not for the purpose of misleading, the notice was good within above Act, ss. 4, 7; (2) it having been proved that the letter containing the notice was posted on Sept. 19, & a reply to it having been received from defts., there was sufficient evidence that the notice had been received by defts. within the time specified in sect. 4 of the Act, although the letter containing the notice was not registered.—PREVIDI v. GATTI & CO. 2017. Remitted common law action—Addition of claim under Act.]—Pltf., who was employed by defts., commenced an action in the High Ct. at common law to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him owing to their negligence. The action was remitted to the county ct. under County Courts Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 66. Pltf. then delivered particulars of his claim, & added, in addition to his claim at common law, an alternative claim under above Act:—Held: he was entitled to do so.—WOOD v. WEBER (1908), 99 L. 2019. Matters taken into account in assessing—"Earnings"—Money & things capable of being turned into money.]—In sect. 3 of above Act, the word "earnings" means money or things capable of being turned into money by accurate estimation, such as rent, food, & clothes; but it does not include a thing so vague as tuition which an apprentice receives from his master.

Pltf. was apprenticed to defts., & received a salary of 1*s.* a week for the first year, increasing 1*s.* a week each year. In the fifth year, when he was earning 5*s.* a week, he was injured, & brought an action to recover compensation under the Act. Evidence was given that at the end of the fifth year, when pltf. would be out of his apprenticeship, he would be able to earn from 14*s.* to 18*s.* a week, & the compensation was assessed at £80:—Held: the amount which pltf. could earn when out of his apprenticeship could not be taken into consideration, but only the amount of his actual earnings as an apprentice; & the amount of the judgment must therefore be reduced.—NOEL v. REDRUTH FOUNDRY CO., [1896] 1 Q. SUB-SECT. 12.—CONTRACTING OUT OF ACT.

2022. Valid contract—Not against public policy.]—It is competent to a workman to contract with his employer not to claim compensation for personal injuries under above Act.

A workman having contracted with his employer for himself & his representatives, & any person entitled in case of death, not to claim any compensation under above Act for personal injury whether resulting in death or not:—Held: (1) above Act, s. 1, only affected the contract of service so far as to negative the implication of an agreement by the workman to bear the risks of the employment, & therefore did not render the workman's express contract not to claim compensation invalid; (2) the contract was not against public policy, & the workman's widow, suing for damages under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), was bound by it.—GRIFFITHS v. DUDLEY (EARL) (1882), 9 Q. Under the rules of the society pltf. became entitled to a weekly allowance in case of temporary disablement by accident whilst in the discharge of his duty, & to a lump sum in case of permanent disablement or death. The rules provide that no claim should be recognised if the accident was not, through negligence, reported within a month from its occurrence; that if the accident was caused wilfully or by gross negligence on the part of insured the claim might be disallowed; that if the injured person was out of his house after a certain hour at night a fine not exceeding one week's allowance might be imposed, & if he was intoxicated the allowance would be liable to forfeiture; that any member who was guilty of criminal misconduct should forfeit all claim; & that if the funds of the society should be insufficient to provide for its liabilities a small levy might be made. Pltf. having been injured by an accident while in the discharge of his duty, brought an action against defts. under above Act. At the time of the action pltf. was still an infant:—Held: the agreement not to sue under above Act was a part of the contract of service; the agreement taken as a whole was for the benefit of the infant; & therefore it was binding upon him & afforded a defence to the action.—CLEMENTS v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. Appct. having so applied for relief, work was given to him to perform in resps.' labour yard, & during such occupation he met with an accident which caused personal injury to him, for which he claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58):—Held: without deciding the question whether resps. carried on a "trade or business" within the meaning of sect. 13 of the Act, appct. had not established that there was any "contract of service" between him & respondents within the meaning of that sect.—BURNS v. MANCHESTER & SALFORD WESLEYAN MISSION (1908), 99 L. Admission to the inclosure to view the airship was only to be obtained by ticket through registering turnstiles or by tickets to be provided by the corpn. & all moneys were to be collected daily by the money-takers employed by the corpn. L. was to receive 50 per cent. of the gross receipts, & thereout he had to pay the persons engaged by him. The corpn. were to receive the remaining 50 per cent. L. was not to acquire any legal interest or estate in the place allotted to him, but was merely permitted to use the same for the special purpose. For the purpose of carrying out his part of the agreement L. engaged a lecturer whose duties were to explain the various parts of the airship & the exploits of L. 2064. —— —— Contract of apprenticeship subsisting.]—An apprentice was serving on board ship, under arts. of apprenticeship, when he met with an accident in Feb. 1913. His term of apprenticeship did not expire until June, 1915, &, under the conditions thereof, the employers were bound to pay wages & provide maintenance, subject to the apprentice obeying proper orders. In Nov. 1913, the apprentice was found by arbn. to be a workman within the Act, & a declaration of liability was granted, the employers in the meantime paying wages & an agreed amount for maintenance. In June, 1914, they considered the lad able to resume work, & ordered him to join a ship. This he refused to do on the ground that he was still unfit for work. The employers thereupon stopped payment, & the lad applied to the county ct. for compensation. The county ct. judge held that the question was one arising under the arts. of apprenticeship, & that he had not, during the continuance of the term of apprenticeship, jurisdiction to deal with the matter. He consequently dismissed the application:—Held: the application was properly dismissed, & there was no misdirection.—TURNER v. PAULWEN (OWNERS) (1915), 8 B. W. C. C. 242, C. A.

2065. Claim brought under particular statutory provision—Workman not a workman within such provision—Foreign seaman claiming as workman.]—A foreign seaman on a foreign ship in an English port met with an accident. He obtained in the county ct. an order for detention of the ship under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 11, & also obtained an award of compensation against the owners of the ship, proceeding against them & serving the master of the ship as provided by sect. 7, but claiming to be entitled to compensation, not under sect. 7, but as a workman apart from that sect. The employers appealed from both the order for detention & the award of compensation:—Held: (1) as to the order for detention, an appeal therefrom lay to the Div. Ct., & not to the Ct. of Appeal; (2) as to the award of compensation, that, as the proceedings were brought in manner only allowed by sect. 7, the workman could only succeed if he came within sect. 7, which he did not in this case.—PANAGOTIS v. PONTIAC (OWNERS), [1912] 1 K. 2066. Determination of ship's nationality—Application of Merchant Shipping Acts.]—(1) Semble: in determining whether a ship is a "British ship . . . of which the owner . . . resides . . . in the United Kingdom," within the meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (1), it is not material to consider whether the ship is to be recognised as a "British ship" under M. S. Act, 1894 (60), s. 2 (2).

(2) Semble: in Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (1) (a), "The notice of accident . . . . may . . . be served on the master of the ship," the words "may be served" are not to be read as "shall be served."—THE RIGEL, [1912] P. 99; 81 L. 2067. Registration of ship cancelled—Before commencement of voyage—Cancellation conclusive.]—A seaman was employed on a smack which sailed from Lowestoft for Norway on Mar. 18, 1913, & was never heard of again. His dependants claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58). Resp. repudiated liability on the ground that he was not the owner of the smack or the employer of deceased, & deceased was not a workman to whom the Act applied. It appeared that resp. had been the registered owner of the smack, but the registration was cancelled on Mar. 8, 1913, with a view to the sale of the ship by C., who was alleged to be the true owner, to foreigners. Resp. contended that inasmuch as when the ship sailed she was no longer registered in the United Kingdom deceased was not a member of the crew of a ship registered in the United Kingdom or of any other ship or vessel of which the owner resided in the United Kingdom within s. 7 (1) of the Act. The judge refused to accept the submission that the registration had been properly cancelled & awarded compensation to the dependants:—Held: inasmuch as the registration was vacated before the ship sailed deceased was not within the protection of the Act; & whatever the judge might have thought of the merits of the case, it was not open to him to go behind the cancellation of registration.—MORTIMER v. WISKER, [1914] 3 K. He is therefore remunerated by a share in the gross earnings within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (2), & is not entitled to compensation under that Act.

2073. —— Subject-matter of profit not on board at time of accident—Stocker money.]—A fishing vessel was lost with all hands a day after leaving port. Compensation was claimed for the death of a seaman on board her. In addition to his wages deceased was entitled, by the custom of the port, to a share of "stocker." There was no stocker on board the vessel when she went down. She was proceeding to fishing grounds, where on former trips a considerable amount of stocker had been taken:—Held: it was a term of the contract of service that deceased should be remunerated by a share of "stocker," & he was therefore "remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings" within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (2), so that his dependants were not entitled to compensation under the Act.— STEPHENSON v. ROSSALL STEAM FISHING CO., LTD. 2074. —— Voluntary work at extra remuneration—Arising out of profit sharing contract.]—A share hand or fisherman, that is, a member of the crew of a trawler who is remunerated by a share of profits or gross earnings & therefore excluded from the benefit of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (2), cannot claim compensation under the Act in respect of an accident which happened to him while voluntarily employed at an extra remuneration, which was shared between himself & the other members of the trawler's crew, in stowing fish boxes on another vessel belonging to the same employers, which carried the day's catch to market, such additional employment arising out of & being incidental to his engagement as a share fisherman.—WHELAN v. GREAT NORTHERN STEAM SHIPPING CO. 2075. What amounts to sharing profits—Wages plus bonus.]—A claim for compensation by the widow of a member of the crew of a fishing vessel, which was lost with all hands, was resisted by the owners on the ground that deceased was remunerated by a share in the profits or gross earnings of the vessel within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 7 (2), & therefore that the Act did not apply to him. He was employed as chief engineer on board a steam trawler at a fixed weekly wage of £2 5*s.* It was the custom of the owners when the gross earnings of the boat exceeded £100 for any one trip, each trip being usually of about a week's duration, to allow a sum of £2 by way of bonus, of which £1 went to the captain & 2*s.* 6*d.* to each of the remaining eight members of the crew. If the gross earnings of the boat exceeded £125 the bonus was proportionately increased & so on, but it was not further increased if the gross earnings realised more than £175:—Held: the bonus was not a share in either the profits or the gross earnings of the vessel, but was an additional sum for wages determined by the amount of the gross earnings. Appct. was therefore entitled to compensation.— NEWSTEAD v. LABRADOR (OWNERS), [1916] 1 K. B. 166; 85 L. J. K. B. 93; 114 L. T. 27; 9 B. W. C. C. 63, C. A.

His contention was that the accident arose "out of & in the course of" his employment. But the county ct. judge before whom the application came negatived that view. The death of the workman having subsequently resulted, it was said, from that accident, an application was made on behalf of his dependants for compensation under the Act. The application came on before the same county ct. judge, who decided that he had not jurisdiction to hear the application on the ground that the matter was res judicata. The dependants appealed:—Held: the dependants of deceased workman had a direct & independent statutory right against his employer under s. 1 of the Act of 1906; deceased workman was not a party to that litigation, nor did his dependants derive their title to compensation by derivation from him; that this being so, there could not be a plea of res judicata, when the previous litigation on which the decision was reached was between parties entirely different from those concerned in the subsequent litigation, & there could not be an estoppel against the dependants, who were no parties to deceased workman's claim for compensation, & did not derive their title from the person who brought it.—HARPER v. DICK, KERR & CO. He was incapacitated for work, & his employers paid him half his weekly wages under an agreement to that effect, a memorandum of which was registered under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37). The workman continued incapable of working, & died in a year. His widow claimed compensation under the Act, & the county ct. judge found that the workman's death was not caused or accelerated by the accident, the sole cause of his incapacity for work being the disease from which he was suffering, & of which disease alone he died; but he held that the employers were estopped from denying that the disease which caused his death was the result of the accident by reason of the agreement & the payments made by them:—Held: the agreement did not amount to an admission that the death was caused by the accident, & therefore there was no estoppel.—CLEVERLEY v. GAS, LIGHT & COKE CO.

2117. —— ——.]—By Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923 (c. 42), s. 22: "For the purposes of the principal Act, a person shall not be deemed to be a partial dependant of another person unless he was dependent partially on contributions from that other person for the provision of the ordinary necessaries of life suitable for persons in his class & position":—Held: in applying the sect. to a case of partial dependency under para. 1 (a) (ii) of Sched. 1. to the Act of 1906, the following principles were applicable:—(a) The ct. must have regard to the standard of living that obtains among persons of the same class & position as the person claiming to be a dependant; (b) as a general rule where the ct. finds that appct., as the head of the family, has adopted a certain scale of expenditure, it ought, primâ facie, to regard that scale as fixing the standard of living of persons in the same class & position as appct., unless that scale is on the face of it grossly excessive or there is evidence to show that it is in fact higher than the standard at which the persons in that class generally aim; (c) there is no common standard for all persons engaged in the same employment. The scale of expenditure must in the case of any particular family depend on a variety of circumstances, such as the number of the children, their sexes & ages, & whether any &, if so, how many of them are working & receiving wages & their amount; (d) the word "necessaries" in s. 22 ought to receive the same meaning as has been attached to it in other connections, as, for example, in the case of contracts by infants, & must be held to include all such things as are reasonable necessary to maintain the particular person in his state, station & degree; (e) where the whole of the family expenditure, including the contribution to it by deceased, is upon necessaries, dependency is established within the terms of the sect.—KENNEDY v. HORDEN COLLIERIES, LTD., BAMFORD v. CHARLAW & SACRISTON COLLIERIES, LTD., BEVAN v. JOICEY (J.) & CO., [1925] 2 K. 2118. —— ——.]—(1) The effect of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923 (c. 42), s. 22, is to restore the rule for determining dependency adopted by the Ct. of Appeal in Simmons v. White Bros., No. 2114, ante, but rejected by the House of Lords in Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, No. 2115, ante, namely, that in order to bring himself within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), as a dependant an appct. for compensation must show that he was to some extent dependent on the earnings of deceased workman for the ordinary necessaries of life, having regard to his class & position in life.

(2) Whether a father is partially dependent upon the earnings of his son, a boy living with him & contributing to the common purse maintaining the family, is a question of fact to be decided after taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case.

Appct. was the father of a boy of fourteen years of age who was killed by an accident arising out of & in the course of his employment as a cleaner-out in resps.' pit. Appct. claimed compensation on the ground that he was partially dependent on the earnings of deceased. Appct. was a miner earning £3 11*s.* a week, with a free house & coals. His eldest son, aged sixteen years, worked in the pit & earned £1 0*s.* 6*d.* a week. Deceased earned 15*s.* 3*d.* a week. Neither the mother nor the youngest son, aged eleven years, earned anything. It was admitted that deceased would have advanced by rapid stages, as he grew & gained experience, to higher wages. The county ct. judge thought that the injury to the father at the time of deceased's death was small, & that to that slight extent there was dependency at the time of the death, but having regard to the fact that he was only fourteen years of age at the time, & in the ordinary course would have contributed increasing sums from time to time, he was of opinion that £50 added to the £15 which resps. had already paid for funeral expenses was "reasonable & proportionate to the injury." He accordingly made an award for £65:—Held: (3) upon the admitted facts, supplemented by his own knowledge & common sense, there was evidence before the county ct. judge upon which he could find that, after feeding & clothing the boy, there was a sufficient actual contribution by him to the provision of the ordinary necessaries of life for the family to constitute a basis for compensation; (4) the county court judge, having found that the father was a partial dependant of the boy, was entitled, in determining what sum he ought to allow for compensation which was "reasonable & proportionate to the injury" suffered by the father, to take into consideration, as he had done, the possibility of an increase in the earnings of the boy had he lived.

Once dependency had been proved the extent of the injury was not to be measured only by the immediate loss, but by the prospective loss which was involved in losing a son, who, after all, is the hope & promise of the future (POLLOCK, M.R.).—PEART v. BOLCKOW, VAUGHAN & CO., [1925] 1

She was a strong, healthy woman, & the county ct. judge, being of opinion that she was able to maintain herself by her own work & that her father's earnings were not therefore the sole source to which she could have looked for maintenance either at the time of his death or during the time when she kept his house, held that she was only a partial dependant, & awarded her compensation on that footing:—Held: it was irrelevant to consider whether appct. could have supported herself. 2133. Existence of dependency—Husband & wife living apart—No contribution to wife's support.]—Upon a claim for compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), by the widow of deceased workman, it appeared that she had lived with & been maintained by him from their marriage up to June, 1904, when being out of work he left her & never afterwards contributed to her maintenance. Her only means of subsistence, after her husband left her, consisted of casual work & the charitable gifts of relatives, & she was for a week in the workhouse. About three weeks before his death, which occurred in Oct. 1904, the husband obtained employment, & he was earning wages when his death was occasioned by an accident arising out of & in the course of his employment. The widow stated in evidence that, before her husband's death, she was expecting him back every day to provide a home. The county court judge found that she was dependent on her husband's earnings at the time of his death, & accordingly awarded her compensation:—Held: the facts justified his finding.

I think that the primary obligation of the husband to support his wife makes her a dependant unless there are some other means of subsistence upon which she can & does in fact rely in substitution for the legal obligation of the husband to 2134. —— —— ——.]—(1) Dependency within the meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), s. 7 (2), must always be a mixed question of law & fact. There is a presumption in favour of the dependency of the wife upon her husband's earnings, which is not rebutted by proof that at the time of his death he was not in fact supporting her.

(2) The rule in Villar v. Gilbey, [1907] A. C. 139, that a child en ventre sa mère shall be deemed to have been born, where it is for its benefit that it should be born, applies in the case of a posthumous child, & consequently such child is a dependant within the Act.

Appct. for compensation was the widow of a workman, to whom she had been married in Mar. 1903, & who was killed in Apr. 1906. The husband had not kept up a home for the wife, & had not since 1904 contributed to her support, she having in that year returned to her parents. The wife in Jan. 1906, went into domestic service, receiving £1 a month & board wages, & was in such service at the time of her husband's death. There was also a child en ventre sa mère at such time, who was born in Sept. 1906. The county ct. judge having decided that neither the widow nor the child were dependants within the Act, the Ct. of Appeal, reversing his decision, held, that he was wrong: (a), in ignoring the presumption of dependency in the case of the wife; & (b) in treating as conclusive the fact that the wife was not receiving any part of her husband's earnings at his death; &, instead of sending the case back, the ct. held that, as a matter of legal inference upon the facts in evidence, there was total dependency both in the case of the widow & of the posthumous child.—WILLIAMS v. OCEAN COAL CO., LTD., [1907] 2 K. 2137. —— —— —— Wife supporting herself.]—Several years before a workman's death his wife voluntarily left him, & persistently declined to return. Her daughter, aged sixteen at the time of the death, went with the mother. The mother was supported from property of her own, & the daughter was supported for a time to some extent from her own earnings, & otherwise by her mother. The workman did not contribute. 2138. Whole or partial dependency—Independent income or earnings of wife.]—A widow & children of deceased workman are none the less "dependants wholly dependent upon his earnings" within the meaning of Schedule I., para. 1 (a) (i), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), because the workman has been enabled, by the receipt of moneys from his wage-earning sons or of moneys coming to him from other channels, to augment the fund out of which he has maintained his household. If, however, a workman's wife has, at the time of his death, independent means of support of any kind, which are not derived through him & which he could not have appropriated without her consent, such as private income or earnings of her own, the case is one of partial dependence on her husband's earnings.—SENIOR v. FOUNTAINS & BURNLEY, LTD., [1907] 2 K. wrong in making an award of compensation in her favour. There is no presumption of law that a wife is dependent upon her husband's earnings merely because of his legal obligation to maintain her, but the existence of this obligation, the probability that it will be discharged, either voluntarily or under compulsion, & the probability that the wife will ever enforce her right if the obligation be not discharged voluntarily, are all matters proper to be considered by the arbitrator in determining the question of fact whether or not the wife, at the time of her husband's injury, looked to his earnings for her maintenance & support in whole or in part.—NEW MONCKTON COLLIERIES, LTD. v. KEELING, [1911] A. Appct. had been deserted by her husband in 1903 & had gone to live with another man, taking her children with her. There was no evidence that deceased had ever supported the children. The county ct. judge found that the children were dependants & awarded them compensation. An appeal by the employer was allowed on the ground that dependency was now a question of fact, & that there was no evidence to support the decision of the county ct. judge.

2147. —— Applicant married & living with husband—Father a lodger.]—Appct., a married woman living with her husband & five children, claimed to be partially dependent upon her father who was killed by an accident arising out of & in the course of his employment by resp. For five years before his death deceased had lodged with appct. & her husband, paying 13*s.* a week towards the household expenses, rendering certain services, & making occasional presents to his daughter. Her husband earned £2 9*s.* a week, out of which he allowed her 23*s.* for the housekeeping of the family, she being under the mistaken idea that his wages were only 30*s.* a week. The household expenses amounted to 36*s.* a week. In an arbitration under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), the county ct. judge estimated that the total profit derived from the excess of the father's payments, services, & gifts was about 3*s.* a week; but he found as a fact that appct. was not a dependant:—Held: his award was right. The husband provided the home & the whole means of living; if there was any profit arising from deceased's payments it belonged to the husband & if there was any dependency it was that of the husband, who could not claim as a dependant under the Act.—MONTGOMERY v. BLOWS, [1916] 1 K. 2155. —— —— ——.]—Appct. was a boatman. He had a son fifteen years of age who helped him with the boats, earning wages which the father computed to be more than £2 per week. Appct. did not actually pay his son any wages while he was working with him. But he made an estimate of what the son was entitled to receive, deducted therefrom £2, & gave the remainder to the son by way of pocket money.

Appct. who was living apart from his wife had also a daughter six & a half years of age. He was tenant of a house of which he paid the rent. He employed a married woman who had two infant children as his housekeeper. He arranged to pay her £5 a week towards the housekeeping, she bearing the rest of the expense thereof out of the separation allowance which she was receiving owing to her husband being a prisoner in Germany. The £2 per week to which appct. reckoned that the son was entitled went in support of the joint household, including that son & appct. & his other child, as well as the three other occupants of the house. The son subsequently left appct.'s employment & entered that of resps., who were shipowners. While working as a seaman on board one of their steamships he met with his death as the result of an "accident arising out of & in the course of" his employment, within the meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 1. His wages on the ship had amounted to £3 per week. Thereupon a claim was made by appct. against resps. for compensation to him as a partial dependant upon the earnings of his son, which was followed in due course by a request for arbn. under the Act.

It was decided by the county ct. judge that appct. was entitled to £1 per week for three years, being the amount of the loss which he had sustained through the death of his son, inasmuch as the maintenance of the son did not amount to as much as £2 per week, & the balance went towards the support of appct. & his other child:—Held: there was a reasonable expectation of payments equivalent to £2 per week being continued by the son if he had lived, either while he was at sea or when he returned to his father's employment; appct. had therefore been deprived of what remained after the money was expended for the maintenance of the son in the joint household, & to that extent he was a dependant upon the earnings of the son; & accordingly he was entitled to receive the compensation which had been awarded to him.—SMITH v. GWENDALOUGH (OWNERS) (1919), 122 L. The three lived together, the son paying his wages to his mother, who put them into the common fund out of which the whole family was maintained. The son was killed by accident, & M. & his wife claimed compensation as "dependants":—Held: as dependency was a question of fact in each case, & resps., by failing to appear on the appeal, admitted that on the facts in this case the mother was dependent in part on her son's earnings, she was entitled to compensation.—MCLEAN v. MOSS BAY HEMATITE & STEEL CO., LTD. 2164. —— Award not expressly based thereon—Presumption of such basis.]—A widow was solely dependent for the upkeep of herself & two daughters on the money derived from her three children. Each daughter brought 6*s.* a week, & lived with their mother. The son lived apart, & brought 10*s.* a week. The son was killed by accident, & his mother claimed as dependant. There was no direct evidence of total dependency on the son's earnings, & the county ct. judge, without actually finding partial dependency, stated that the only question for him to decide was as to the amount of compensation to be paid, & he awarded £90:—Held: the case was clearly dealt with on the basis of partial dependency, & there was no misdirection.—FORD v. OAKDALE COLLIERY CO., LTD. 2165. —— Contribution by two children—Equivalent sum secured to parent on cessation by one child—Death of other child.]—A woman lived at home with her two sons who paid for the upkeep & maintenance of the home. One of the sons married & left his mother. In his place came two lodgers on terms that they contributed to the cost of coal used in the house, rent, & so forth, much as the son had done before he married. A few days later the other son was killed. The mother claimed compensation as a dependant. The county ct. judge found partial dependency only, & awarded compensation on that basis. The mother appealed on the ground that she was wholly dependent:—Held: the question was one entirely of fact, & there was evidence to support the county ct. judge's finding.—BROOK v. LODGE (HENRY), LTD. He paid her sums of money in excess of the amount required for his board & lodging, as he intended that appct. should spend the surplus as she wished:—Held: appct. could not be partially dependent on the brother as she was wholly dependent on her husband with whom she lived.—TOOLE v. ISLE OF ERIN (OWNERS) (1909), 3 B. SUB-SECT. 1.—EMPLOYMENT OTHER THAN MANUAL LABOUR WHERE REMUNERATION EXCEEDS £350 PER ANNUM.

A. Employment Other than Manual Labour.

See Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 3 (2).

2171. Whether labour manual or otherwise—Principal work to be considered—Employment including manual work—Expert chemist in dye works.]—A man, who had taken a degree in science, entered the employment of a dye & chemical manufacturing co., under a written agreement for five years' service, & upon terms with regard to salary, commission on profits of inventions or improvements in manufacture discovered by him, restrictions as to employment after the termination of his engagement, & disclosure of matters relating to the business of the co. & his own researches, applicable to employment as a skilled expert in the business of his employers. His employment involved manual labour on his part. In the course of his employment he met with an accident which caused his death. On an application under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), an award of compensation was made by a county ct. judge, on the ground that the fact that the man did manual labour brought the case within the Act. On appeal:—Held: the governing factor in determining whether the man was a workman within the meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37), was the question what he was employed to do, & the judge misdirected himself by not taking into consideration the terms of the employment as disclosed in the agreement, & in treating the performance of manual labour in the discharge of his duties as conclusive that the man was a workman within the Act.—BAGNALL v. LEVINSTEIN, LTD., [1907] 1 K. o. —— —— ——.]—In deciding whether or not an employee was engaged in manual labour within the definition of workman in Workmen's Compensation Act, 1908, s. 2, the real test is whether the substantial nature of the employment was or was not manual labour. If the substantial part of the employment could not be described as manual labour, the fact that manual labour had to be performed would entitle him to the benefits of a manual labourer.—Re DILLEY & CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. 2173. —— —— Principal duty supervision—Quay foreman.]—The test whether a foreman is outside the definition of a "workman" in Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58), s. 13, which excludes "any person employed otherwise than by way of manual labour whose remuneration exceeds £250 a year," is not whether he is engaged only in supervision but whether his principal work is supervision & not manual labour, & the words "whose remuneration exceeds £250 a year" cover the case of an employee who is being paid at a monthly rate which, if the contract should continue for a year, would amount to more than £250.

Appct. was a quay foreman in the employ of resps. His duty was to supervise gangs of dock labourers. While so engaged he was wilfully assaulted by one of the men & sustained a severe injury to his eye whereby he was totally incapacitated, & for which he sought compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58). At the time of the injury he was receiving £21 a month from resps., by whom he had been employed for twenty years, his engagement being determinable by one month's notice. The county ct. judge made an award in his favour. Resps. appealed on the grounds: (a) that the injury was not due to an accident arising out of the employment; (b) that appct. was not a "workman" within sect. 13 of the Act. There was evidence that he occasionally lent a hand to the men, but his substantial duty was that of supervision only:—Held: (1) the injury was caused by an accident arising out of & in the course of the employment; (2) appct. was not a "workman" within the Act, his substantial employment being supervision & not manual labour, & his remuneration exceeding £250 a year.—REID v. BRITISH & IRISH STEAM PACKET CO., [1921] 2 K. 2174. Manager of coal mine—Presence required in mine.]—The certificated manager of a coal mine, who is paid a yearly salary, & who, although his duties require his presence in the mine, is not required to engage in manual labour, is not a "workman" within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (c. 37).—SIMPSON v. EBBW VALE STEEL, IRON & COAL CO., [1905] 1 K.
